Digital Made Simple

The New Dynamax DCR1000
Digital Cartridge Recorder

Our new Digital Cartridge Recorder, the Dynamax DCR1000, features simple cart-like mechanics with just three front panel buttons on the playback unit. No special training or keyboard is necessary for operation. 3 ½" floppy disks serve as reliable, low cost recording media.

Our staff of veteran broadcast professionals preserved all the familiar user-friendly functions and flexibility of conventional cart machines in the DCR1000. We know the ins and outs of on-air studios as well as the needs of station personnel. Engineers will appreciate the durability and virtually maintenance free design of the DCR1000. (The disk drive offers over 20,000 hours MTBF yet requires less than 15 minutes to replace.) D.J.s will put their hands on instant cue and start buttons. The production staff will enjoy CD quality audio and the ease of direct digital dubbing. And Station Management will find the price reasonable – about the same as Dynamax CTR90 Series Cartridge Machines.

You will be amazed by the versatility of the Dynamax DCR1000. Call Fidelipac for more information and a brochure.

User's Guide

Broadcasting & Cable Market Place has been reorganized into eleven sections to ease usage of all the data compiled into this one volume.

Data may be found through various access points, as well as browsing through a particular section:

Table of Contents* on pages v and vi. Provides an overview of the entire publication by section.

Table of Contents* for each section. The first page of each section has a table of contents for that section only.

Indexes:

Radio, Television and Cable Industries Yellow Pages
Index to Radio and Television by State/Possession/Province
Index to Sections
Index to Advertisers

Note on Abbreviations: Abbreviations are used throughout this directory to conserve space. All abbreviations are explained in the List of Abbreviations, which can be found in this section.

Note on Filing Rules: Acronyms and initials appear first in the alphabetical order of most listings in this book (except the radio and television directories).

This User's Guide provides general guidelines by section, and includes specific instructions only when needed.

Section A

Radio

The Table of Contents on the first page provides an overview of the entire section.

A sample radio station listing with a key to all the elements contained in an entry is provided on the second page of this section.

The Directory of Radio Stations in the U.S. and Canada is organized by state or province, then city, then call letters (except when two or more stations are co-owned, the lead station is listed first, with the trail station immediately following). Stations in the United States are listed first; the stations in Canada follow.

Immediately following the above directory are Miscellaneous Radio Stations: Armed Forces Radio, Radio Free Europe, U.S. International Radio, and Voice of America. Each of these listings contain contact information, personnel (when available), and a description of the service.

Please note: access to radio stations by call letters is through the Radio, Television & Cable Industries Yellow Pages, located at the back of this publication in Section K.

The following listings have pulled together specific data from the radio station listings and FCC sources to aid the user in compiling research, etc. Once the radio station(s) have been identified, refer to the Directory of Radio Stations in the United States and Canada for complete information.

Table of FM Allotments contains the channels (other than noncommercial, educational channels 201-220) designated for use in communities in the United States, its territories and possessions as of September 1991. The listing is by state, then by city, with the channel listed next to the city.

College, University and School-Owned Radio Stations is a listing by state, then by city, then by call letters of college, university, and school-owned radio stations in the United States.

U.S. AM Stations by Frequency are listed by state, then by city, under the frequency heading, which is listed in ascending, numeric sequence. Clear stations appear in boldface type. Refer to the frequency heading to determine if the station is on a clear regional or local frequency. For an explanation of AM station classes, see the Brief History of Broadcasting and Cable within this section.

U.S. FM Stations by Frequency are listed by state, then by city under the frequency and channel number. Frequencies are listed in ascending numeric order.

Canadian AM Stations by Frequency are listed by province, then by city, under the frequency heading, which is listed in ascending numeric sequence.

Canadian FM Stations by Frequency are listed by province, then by city under the frequency heading, which is listed in ascending numeric sequence.

Radio Formats Defined describes programming and the specific radio formats currently provided and included in the Directory of Radio Stations in the U.S. and Canada. The formats are listed alphabetically.

Radio Formats by State and Radio Formats by Province include the number of AM and FM stations in each state or province, with a breakdown of the number of commercial and noncommercial stations, followed by a ranked tally of formats. Note: This tally includes only those stations that have provided format information.

U.S. and Canada Radio Programming Formats is a chart that provides totals for format usage in the United States and Canada, broken down by AM/FM and commercial/noncommercial.

Programming on Radio Stations in the United States and Canada provides a quick reference to regular programming formats by radio format, by state or province, then city, then by call letters.

Special Programming on Radio Stations in the United States and Canada provides a quick reference to foreign-language and other specialized programming, such as Agriculture and Farm, Polish language, etc., by radio format, by state or province, then city, then by call letters.

Section B

Television

The Table of Contents on the first page provides an overview of the entire section.

A sample television station listing with a key to all the elements contained in an entry is provided on the second page of this section.

The Directory of Television Stations in the United States and Canada is organized by state or province, then city, then call letters (except when two or more noncommercial stations are co-owned, the lead station is listed first in the proper alpha position, with the trail station following). Stations in the United States are listed first; the stations in Canada follow.

Please note: access to television stations by call letters is through the Radio, Television & Cable Industries Yellow Pages, located at the back of this publication in Section K.

The following listings have pulled together specific data from the television station listings and FCC sources to aid the user in compiling research, etc. Once the television station(s) have been identified, refer to the Directory of Television Stations in the United States and Canada for complete information.

Low Power Television Stations are listed by state, then by city, then by call letters. Information provided includes date station first went on air (when available), licensee, contact, address.

Spanish-Language Television Stations that operate within the United States or near the U.S. border are listed by state, then by market, then by call letters and city. Channel numbers are also provided.

Experimental Television Stations is an alphabetical list of stations authorized by the FCC as of January 1992.

U.S. Independent Television Stations are listed by state, then city, then call letters.

College, University and School-Owned Television Stations are listed by state, then city, then call letters.

U.S. Television Stations Broadcasting in Stereo are listed by state, then city, then call letters.

Television Stations by Channel in the United States and Canada are listed by state, then city, then call letters. The frequency is included with each U.S. channel.

Television Assignments by State contains the channels designated for the listed communities in the United States, its Territories, and possessions by state, then city. Channels designated with an asterisk (*) are assigned for use by noncommercial educational broadcast stations only. A station on a channel identified by a plus (+) or minus (-) mark is required to operate with its carrier frequencies offset 10 khz above or below, respectively, the nominal carrier frequencies.

Section C

Cable

The Table of Contents on the first page provides an overview of the entire section.

A sample MSO/Cable System listing with a key to all the elements contained in an entry is provided on the second page of this section.

The Directory of Multiple Systems Operators (MSOs) and Cable Systems in the United States and Canada contains the listings for the top 38 U.S. or Canadian MSOs, and information on their individual large cable systems with 20,000 subscribers or more. Information on their smaller cable systems is included when available. The listings are in alphabetical sequence by MSO.

The Geographic Index to Cable Systems provides state and city access to the cable systems listed with the individual MSOs.

Broadcasters in Cable Television lists companies and individuals in alphabetical sequence that have at least partial ownership in radio or TV stations and in MSOs (multiple system operators) or individual cable systems, but are not necessarily MSOs.

Section D

Satellites and Other Carriers

The Table of Contents on the first page provides an overview of the entire section.

Satellite Owners and Operators are listed alphabetically by company name. Information provided includes address, phone, personnel, and a brief description.

Satellite Guide to the Sky, a chart, provides a broad satellite perspective of each carrier and their satellites currently in space.

Satellite Resale and Common Carriers are listed alphabetically by company name. Information provided includes address, phone, personnel, and a brief description of their services.

Direct Broadcast Satellites are listed alphabetically by company name. Information provided includes address, phone, personnel, and a brief description of their services.

Teleports are listed by state (although the state is not shown), then city, then company name. Information provided includes address, phone, personnel, ownership, and a brief description of their services.

Microwave services are listed alphabetically by company name. Information provided includes address, phone, personnel, regional offices, and a brief description of their services.

Multipoint Distribution or MDS Systems are listed by state, then city, then company name with address.

Section E

Market Statistics, Advertising and Marketing Services

This section is divided into two parts: 1) Radio, Television, Cable Market Statistics, and 2) Advertising and Marketing Services.

The Table of Contents on the first page is an overview of the entire section.

Radio, Television, Cable Market Statistics

Radio Marketplace

U.S. Radio Markets contains the Arbitron population ranking in alphabetical sequence by radio market (city). The two charts that follow, U.S. Radio Markets: Arbitron Metro Survey Area Ranking, and U.S. Radio Markets: Population Ranking provide additional information to assist in the use of U.S. Radio Markets.

The next four charts and tables, Growth of Radio Broadcasting Pre-Television 1922 - 1945, U.S. Radio Set Sales 1958-1990, Record of Radio Station Growth Since Television Began, and U.S. Radio Audiences include explanatory notes regarding the data included in the chart, or the organization of the data.

Television Marketplace

The Arbitron ADI Market Atlas lists Arbitron's 210 ADI (Area of Dominant Influence) markets for 1991-1992 alphabetically by city.

The two charts that follow the atlas, Multi-City ADI Cross-Reference and Non-ADI Markets provide additional information to assist in use of the atlas.

The two charts, Television Markets Ranked by Size and Television Markets by Nielsen Marketing Research Territory provide market information from two distinct compilation and reporting methods.

The Top 100 Companies provides company and revenue data according to the Electronic Communications Index (ECI).

The next four charts and tables, How Network Delivery Varies by Market, U.S. Sales of Television Receivers 1958-1990, Record of Television Station Growth Since Television Began, and U.S. Television Audiences include explanatory notes regarding the data included in the charts, or the organization of the data.

Cable Marketplace

Cable Penetration by Market is a listing that contains the number of cable homes and the percentage of cable penetration as compiled by A.C. Nielsen Company. The information is listed by Nielsen's Designated Market Areas (DMA). The next two charts provide an overview of the top 50 Designated Market Areas ranked by Percentage of Cable Penetration, Cable Television Households, and the third chart is an overview of the top 20 Designated Market Areas ranked by Television Households. The fourth chart provides an overview of the Bottom 50 DMA Ranked by Percentage of Cable Penetration.

The last chart in this section, Top 30 MSOs, provides the number of subscribers for the top 30 MSOs covered in the Directory of Multiple Systems Operators and Cable Systems in the United States and Canada in Section C.

Advertising and Marketing Services

Advertising Agencies Handling Major Radio and Television Accounts is an alphabetical listing by company. Information provided is name, address, phone number, and executives. Fax number, address of regional or satellite offices, and additional contacts are supplied as appropriate. Regional or satellite offices are listed alphabetically by city.

Independent Media Buying/Planning Services is an alphabetical listing by company. Information provided is name, address, phone number. Fax number, address of regional or satellite offices, additional contacts, and a brief description of the services are supplied when provided. Regional or satellite offices are listed alphabetically by city.

Radio, Television Station and Cable Representatives is an alphabetical listing by company. Information provided is name, address, phone number. Fax number, address of regional or satellite offices, and additional contacts are supplied as appropriate. Regional or satellite offices are listed alphabetically by city. Representatives in the United States are listed first, with Canadian representatives following.

Public Relations, Publicity and Promotion Services is an alphabetical listing by company. Information provided is name, address, phone number. Fax number, address of regional or satellite offices, additional contacts, and a brief description of their services may also be supplied. Regional or satellite offices are listed alphabetically by city.

Section F

Programming Services

This section is divided into five parts: 1) Producers, Distributors, Production and Other Services, an alphabetical compilation of various services with subject access, 2) Radio Programming Services, 3) Television Programming Services, 4) Cable Programming Services, and 5) Other Programming Services.

The first page provides a Table of Contents, an overview of the entire section.

Producers, Distributors, Production and Other Services is in two parts: the Subject Index lists the company name under one or more appropriate subjects, and the Alphabetical Index lists the complete name, address, phone, fax, personnel, and a brief description of the company.

When a company name is not known, search under an appropriate subject in the Subject Index. When a company has been identified, turn to the Alphabetical Index for complete information on that company.

Preface

As the new publishers of Broadcasting Yearbook, we at R.R. Bowker, a leader in reference book publishing for over 100 years, recognized the value of the vast amount of information the yearbook contained, but instinctively knew that the organization of the material had outgrown its original aim. We sought to perfect what is already well regarded by leaping into the '90s and expanding coverage of the cable industry. Our commitment to the inclusion of cable information and the reorganization of the book necessitated a title change—one that would clearly identify the coverage of this resource. Broadcasting Yearbook has been retitled Broadcasting & Cable Market Place, effective with this 1992 edition.

Broadcasting & Cable Market Place has been thoroughly reorganized into eleven sections to enable easy and almost effortless access to the wealth of information supplied in this directory. New features have been added and this 1992 edition reflects many enhancements throughout.

Most noticeable must be the size of this volume, which has doubled—but with a new stronger binding. Eleven tabs provide quick access to each of the eleven sections.

An exciting feature of this edition is the reintroduction of complete cable information, the Multiple System Operators (MSOs) and their individual cable systems. Extensive information is provided for the MSOs and their systems with over 20,000 subscribers. Contact information for smaller systems is also given. To enable us to reintroduce more complete cable information this edition, we concentrated on providing data covering the top 38 MSOs, which together have over 50% of the cable subscriber base. Research indicated that listing the entire organization, that is the MSO and its cable systems, would be the most efficient and useful. Access to companies serving particular areas is provided by the geographic index. As we plan to include all MSOs and their systems in the next edition, we hope that many of our users will contact us with comments on this organization.

The brand new index, Radio, Television & Cable Industries Yellow Pages, includes the names, phone numbers, and section letters of the organizations and personnel listed in the radio, television and cable directories. This index has eliminated the need for the radio and television listings by call letters, as each station is listed by their call letters in the "yellow pages."

For the first time, complete subject access is available for all the companies contained in both the Producers, Distributors, Production and Other Services listing, and the Equipment Manufacturers and Distributors and Technical Services listing. We have eliminated the Buyers Guide, which only provided subject access for a small and select number of companies that advertised. We also merged smaller "subject-oriented" listings into either the Producers, Distributors and Other Services listing of 1,094 companies, or the Equipment Manufacturers and Distributors and Technical Services listing of 1,164 companies, with access through one of the new Subject Indexes. These new Subject Indexes also enable a company to be identified by all or most of their services.

Participation in conferences and trade shows is important in any industry, especially with industry and world-wide changes happening so rapidly. A listing of 38 trade shows for the radio, television, and cable industries is another new feature in this 1992 edition. The information on the trade shows is drawn from the annual directory Trade Show Week Data Book, also published by R.R. Bowker.

One of the best means of keeping up with the news and industry developments is with periodical literature. New to this edition are two listings of industry-related periodicals—the first is a selection of 65 domestic and foreign periodicals compiled by Professor Christopher H. Sterling, and the second is a listing of 301 U.S. and Canadian periodicals drawn from the Ulrich's International Periodicals Directory database.

Videos are fast becoming an integral part of classroom, office and home, as they provide an excellent means of study and entertainment. The 40 industry-related videos included in this edition are largely for adult audiences, and have been taken from Bowker's Complete Home Video Directory database.

A listing of 314 industry-related books published in the past 2 years has also been added from the Books in Print database, in addition to the selection of 230 titles provided by Professor Christopher H. Sterling.

Also new is a User's Guide, included in this section, which briefly explains how listings and indexes are organized and what elements of information are given.

A very special feature of this 1992 edition is the inclusion of a complete chronology of broadcasting and cable events from 1931 (the year Broadcasting magazine started) to 1991, to celebrate the 60th anniversary of Broadcasting magazine. A chronology first appeared in the November 1, 1970 issue of Broadcasting to celebrate its 40th anniversary, and was updated in the October 12, 1981 issue to celebrate its 50th anniversary. While an updated chronology was not included in the 1991 60th anniversary issue, Mark Miller, Managing Editor, Broadcasting magazine, brought the chronology up to date for inclusion in this edition. This fascinating pass through history will not appear anywhere else and is included in this edition only.

Many changes and enhancements will be evident throughout this book—listings have been expanded, merged, changed, and reorganized into eleven sections. "A Short Course in Broadcasting" and "A Short Course in Cable" have been merged together as the Year in Review, "The ABC's of the Fifth Estate" has been updated and changed to the Brief History of Broadcasting and Cable, Law Firms Active in Communications Law has been expanded to include 1,191 law firms and practicing attorneys, and the Index to Sections has been improved and expanded.

Each edition of Broadcasting & Cable Market Place is compiled by mailing questionnaires to all current entrants and to possible new entrants identified throughout the year. Entrant questionnaires are mailed from approximately August through October each year—we urge all entrants to provide updated information throughout the year and to return the questionnaires by mail or fax even if there are no corrections. The editorial address is Broadcasting & Cable Market Place, 121 Chanlon Road, New Providence, NJ 07974, Fax: 908/771-7725.

In addition to the questionnaires, data collection and updating are provided by the Broadcasting magazine staff and other outside sources. The contributions of the outside sources are an invaluable part of Broadcasting & Cable Market Place, and I extend my appreciation to Sherm Brody, Arbitron; Louisa Nielsen, Broadcast Education Association; Laurie Adler, Electronic Industries Association; Maureen Peratino and Sandy Bailey, FCC; Mary Blasinsky, Federal Communications Bar Association; Christopher Sterling, George Washington University; David Dole, ISCI; John Kompas, LPTV Report; Cynthia Brumfield, National Cable Television Association; Joanne Curcio, The Nielsen Co.; Robert Emeritz, Pike & Fischer, Inc.; and the Radio Advertising Bureau.

This 1992 edition of Broadcasting & Cable Market Place contains information on 12,749 radio stations, of which 5,446 are AM and 7,303 are FM, 1,934 television stations, and 38 MSOs, which collectively own 527 cable systems.

Arrangements for classified advertising (professional cards, tie-ins, station headers, boldface listings, annotations) in Broadcasting and Cable Market Place is coordinated by Jacqueline Hurwitz, 908/771-7724. Display advertising, including tabs, for Broadcasting and Cable Market Place is coordinated by Larry Oliver, 212/599-2830.

Mailing lists of radio stations and television stations will be available in Spring 1992, and other lists will be available later in the year. Please contact Leigh Yuster or Dean Hollister at R.R. Bowker to discuss your mailing list needs from the Broadcasting & Cable Market Place database.

A book of this magnitude requires the efforts of many dedicated people working together—and that was duly accomplished with tremendous spirit and talent. My heartfelt appreciation to Dean Hollister, Director, Database Planning and Elizabeth Onaran, Managing Editor, for their untiring efforts and dedication to producing this edition in such a short span of time with so many changes, enhancements, and new features, and to the Associate Editors, Joe Esser, Brian Proffitt, and Kim Willard, and the fine staff of editorial assistants for tackling all this work with fervor and dedication. My thanks also to Judy Redel, Managing Editor, Research and Tanya Hurst, Research Manager for their tireless work in compiling the cable information, and to David Seyler, past Manager of Broadcasting Yearbook, for so conscientiously sharing his knowledge and experience. My appreciation also to everyone at Broadcasting magazine for continuing to be an active partner in the compilation of this volume, with special thanks to Mark Miller for compiling the last ten years of the chronology, to Don West for supplying the first fifty years, and to Doris Kelly, for her assistance with much of the advertising. Sincere appreciation also to Peter Simon, Vice President, Database Publishing, James P. Murray, Senior Vice President & General Manager, and to all members of the Systems, Operations, Advertising, Manufacturing and Marketing departments for their roles in the completion of this 1992 volume.

As this edition is going to press, we are already planning additional changes, enhancements, and new features for the 1993 edition. Feedback from our users is essential; we strongly encourage you to contact us with suggestions and comments for future editions, as well as comments on the new and expanded 1992 edition.

We trust that you will find this source of information on the broadcasting and cable industries valuable, well-organized and easy to use.

executives, and a brief description of the type of services provided.

Basic Cable Services is an alphabetical listing of cable video networks and superstations. Information provided includes address, phone, executives, and a brief description of the services offered.

Automated Cable Channel Programmers is an alphabetical listing of video alpha-numeric text services, often with enhanced graphics, which provide news, weather, sports, business information, and program guide information. Information provided includes address, phone, contacts, and type of text available.

Audio Cable Programming Services is an alphabetical listing of audio programming and cable radio services available for cable channels not occupied by TV stations or cable networks. Music formats, religious and international programs, and background music for alpha-numeric channels are available. Information provided includes address, phone, and type of audio programs offered.

Cable Sports Services is an alphabetical listing of national and regional cable sports networks. Information provided includes address, phone, executives, and a description of the type of sports programming offered.

Canadian Cable Programming Services is an alphabetical listing of Canadian cable networks, pay TV services, and specialty services. Information provided includes address, phone, and type of service available.

Other Programming Services

Music Licensing Groups is an alphabetical listing of organizations that provide licenses for the public performance of musical compositions. Information provided includes address, phone, executives, and a brief description.

Videotext Operations is an alphabetical listing of organizations that provide news or other text via a two-way interactive service that uses either two-way cable or telephone lines. Information provided includes address, phone, executives, and a brief description.

Teletext Operations is an alphabetical listing of firms or TV stations that transmit news or other text via an unused portion of a standard television signal. Information provided includes address, phone, personnel, and a brief description.

Subcarrier/VBI Services is an alphabetical listing of firms that provide audio programs or video text or data using portions of FM or TV signals. Information provided includes address, phone, executives, and services offered.

Section G

Services and Suppliers

This section is divided into two parts: 1) Technological Services, and 2) Professional Services.

The Table of Contents on the first page is an overview of the entire section.

Technological Services

Equipment Manufacturers and Distributors and Technical Services is in two parts: the Subject Index lists the company name under one or more appropriate subjects, and the Alphabetical Index lists the complete name, address, phone, fax, personnel and a brief description of the company.

When a company name is not known, search under an appropriate subject in the Subject Index. When a company has been identified, turn to the Alphabetical Index for complete information on that company.

Professional Services

Station and Cable Television Brokers lists brokers or brokerage firms that service the media field specifically in alphabetical sequence by company name. Information provided includes address, phone, fax, personnel, and a brief description of services.

Consultants lists individuals or companies that provide a variety of services to the media field, i.e., strategic planning, management, facilities design, etc. Listings are in alphabetical sequence by company name and include address, phone, fax, personnel, and a brief description of services.

Station Financing Services lists individuals or companies that provide a variety of financial services to the communications industries. Listings are in alphabetical sequence by company name and include address, phone, fax, personnel, and a brief description of services.

Research Services is an alphabetical listing of various tracking, monitoring, and research services that serve the broadcasting and cable industries. Information provided includes address, phone, fax, personnel, regional or satellite offices, and a brief description of the services.

Engineering and Technical Consultants is an alphabetical listing by company or individual; individuals are listed by the last name. Information provided includes address, phone, fax, personnel, and a brief description of the services (when supplied). An asterisk (*) indicates membership in the Association of Federal Communications Consulting Engineers.

Law Firms Active in Communications Law is an alphabetical listing of firms or individuals that practice before the FCC as reported by radio and television stations, brokers, consultants, and the attorneys themselves. Information was also gleaned from the Martindale-Hubbell database, Martindale-Hubbell, New Providence, NJ, and the Federal Communications Bar Association. Many, but not all, are members of the Federal Communications Bar Association. Information provided includes address, phone, fax, attorneys. A brief description may also be provided.

Talent Agents and Managers is an alphabetical listing by company name. Information provided includes address, phone, fax, personnel, regional or satellite offices, and a brief description.

Employment and Executive Search Services is an alphabetical listing by company name. Information provided includes address, phone, fax, personnel, regional or satellite offices, and a brief description.

Section H

Associations, Events, Education, Awards

The Table of Contents on the first page provides an overview of the entire section.

Associations

Major National Associations includes those organizations with large memberships, and a large roster of departments and personnel. These associations tend to have a strong voice in the broadcasting and cable industries. The associations are listed alphabetically by their full name; acronyms are provided in parentheses. Information provided includes the headquarters address and phone, and various personnel: officers, boards, representatives, committees.

Please note that the "National Association of Broadcasters (NAB)", which begins on the first page of this listing, is spread over the three columns, due to the size of the organization.

National Associations includes all national associations and professional societies. Cross-references for the Major National Associations are included. Listings are alphabetical by their full name. Information provided includes headquarters address, phone, and executive personnel.

State Broadcast Associations and State Cable Associations are listed by state (regardless of the association name). Information provided includes headquarters address, phone, and executive personnel.

Union/Labor Groups are listed alphabetically by the union or labor group's full name. Information provided includes headquarters address, phone, executive personnel, and regional offices.

Events

Trade Shows lists national and state conferences and trade shows for the communications industries. Listings are alphabetical by the name of the show, and provide contact information for the show management. Additional information that may be supplied includes show sponsor, show management statement, show facts: location & dates of scheduled shows, est. net square footage, est. number of exhibiting companies, est. number of attendees, general contractor, profile of exhibitors, and profile of attendees.

Education

Schools Specializing in Radio-TV-Cable includes only those educational institutions that specialize in professional or technical courses in broadcasting. The listing is alphabetical by the name of the school. Information provided includes address, phone, personnel, other branch locations, and a brief description of the type of training provided, or a listing of the courses offered.

Universities and Colleges lists institutions alphabetically by state in three parts: 1) Universities and Colleges Offering Degrees in Broadcasting, 2) Universities and Colleges Offering Broadcasting Courses, and 3) Two-Year Colleges Offering Programs in Broadcasting. The name and address is provided. Degrees offered may also be listed.

Additional information on educational opportunties in broadcasting, cable and communications may be obtained from the Broadcast Education Association, Washington, D.C.

Awards

Major Broadcasting Awards is an alphabetical listing by the name of the award, which may or may not include the sponsoring body. Note: Abbreviations and acronyms appear first in the alphabetical sequence. If a sponsor presents more than one award, each award is listed separately. The awards included are presented in the areas of broadcasting, cable, and the media. Entries include a description of the award, entrant deadline dates, and contact information.

Section I

Books, Periodicals, Videos

The Table of Contents on the first page provides an overview of the entire section.

Books is divided into two parts:

Books on Broadcasting, Cable and Electronic Media, An Annotated Bibliography compiled by Christopher H. Sterling. The bibliography annotates a selection of the most useful recent books listed by author, or title when no author is available. Information provided includes title, author, number of pages, price, name of publisher and a brief description.

Books on Broadcasting and Cable is a alphabetical listing by title of books on broadcasting, cable, satellites, and mass media published largely in 1990 and 1991 from the Books in Print database, published by R.R. Bowker, New Providence, New Jersey. Information provided includes title, author, number of pages, publication date, price, binding, ISBN and publisher name and address.

Periodicals is divided into two parts:

Periodicals on Broadcasting, Cable and Electronic Media, An Annotated Bibliography, compiled by Christopher H. Sterling. The bibliography annotates a selection of important periodicals issued here and abroad listed by title. Information provided includes, title, frequency, publisher name and address, and a brief description.

Periodicals on Broadcasting and Cable is an alphabetical listing by title of periodicals on broadcasting, cable, satellites, and mass media published in the U.S. and Canada, from the Ulrich's International Periodicals Directory database, published by R.R. Bowker, New Providence, New Jersey. Information provided includes title, frequency (codes are explained in the List of Abbreviations), price, year first started, ISSN, publisher name, address and phone, format, and a brief description.

Videos on Broadcasting and Cable is an alphabetical listing by title of videos on broadcasting, cable, satellites, and mass media produced in the U.S. from Bowker's Complete Home Video Directory database (available on CD-ROM as Variety's Video Directory Plus), published by R.R. Bowker, New Providence, New Jersey. Information provided includes title, year produced, length, narrator(s), host(s) and/or featured person(s), a brief description, producer name and address. Audience is largely adult.

Section J

Law and Regulation, Government Agencies and Ownership

The Table of Contents on the first page provides an overview of the entire section.

This section is divided into three parts: 1) Law & Regulation, 2) Government Agencies, and 3) Ownership.

Law and Regulation

FCC Executives and Staff includes a listing of the executives and staff by department; information provided includes department phone numbers and titles. Also included is a flow chart of FCC operations.

FCC Rules and Regulations outlines the rules and regulations as set by the Federal Communications Commission. The first page contains a brief table of contents as a guide to FCC rules paragraph headings. This listing is updated and maintained with the cooperation of Pike & Fischer Inc., publisher of Pike & Fischer Radio Regulation, and Pike & Fischer's Broadcast Rules Service.

Cable Regulations is an outline of federal cable television rules, including current regulations and developments.

The Industry Standard Coding Identification System (ISCI) is described; the NAB Television and Radio Codes have been suspended; the description is included here for historical information only.

Government Agencies

Government Agencies of Interest to Broadcasting and Cable are listed first by those in the U.S. and then in Canada. Information provided includes address (headquarters and other locations), phone, personnel and/or committee members.

U.S. State Cable Regulatory Agencies lists the agencies alphabetically by state, regardless of the agency name.

Ownership

Television Ownership Transfers is a comprehensive history of television station transfers from the inception of authorized commercial service through December 1991. Transfers are listed by state, city, then call letters.

Note: Information contained here is obtained from Broadcasting magazine, and the Broadcasting magazine regular columns "For the Record and "Changing Hands."

1991 Station Sales provides information on station sales of one million and higher. The sales transactions are provided in price sequence with the highest price first. Information provided is price, the properties, the seller, and the buyer. This information is provided by the Broadcasting magazine staff.

38 Years of Station Transactions lists the dollar volume of transactions approved by the FCC from 1954 to 1991. The figures for 1991 are in bold type. Information included in this chart is tracked weekly by the Broadcasting magazine staff.

Group Ownership includes individuals and companies with multiple station holdings—those controlling three or more radio stations and/or two or more television stations. The listing is in alphabetical sequence by company and includes the station call letters with city and state, and the name, address, phone, and fax of the group.

Note: Notations in the television directory regarding group ownership and cross-ownership are cross-referenced to information listed here.

Newspaper/Magazine Cross-Ownership with Broadcasting Stations includes companies that have interests in both broadcasting and newspaper or magazine publishing. Minority interest are indicated where information is available. In many instances stations and publications are owned by the same interests, but operations are entirely separate. The listing is in alphabetical sequence by company and includes the company name, address, phone and fax, the name of each newspaper and/or magazine, with the city and state in which they are published, the call letters of each station, with the city and state in which they operate.

Note: Notations in the television directory regarding group ownership and cross-ownership are cross-referenced to information listed here.

Broadcasting Stations Associated with Newspaper/Magazine Ownership is a state-by-state (or province) cross-reference listing of broadcasting stations and the publishing companies or newspapers with which the companies listed in the prior listing are associated. The U.S. is listed first followed by Canada. The listing is by state or province, then by city, then by call letters.

Section K

Indexes

The Radio, Television and Cable Industries Yellow Pages lists each radio and TV station, cable MSO, large cable system, and all the personnel included in these directories. There are two types of "yellow page" listings: a station or company listing, and a personal listing. The station or company listings include the station call letters or company name, city and state, phone number, and section letter (where the full entry is listed). The personal listings include the person's name (last name first), the station or company name, city and state, phone number, and section letter (where the full entry is listed).

Note: If a person is connected with two or more stations or systems, that person will have two or more (multiple) listings. These multiple listings will appear in random sequence; scan these multiple listings for the station or company that is needed.

The Index to Radio and Television by State/Possesion/Province is a one-page quick reference to the first page of each state, possession or province for both the radio and television directories.

The Index to Sections provides keyword access to the listings, indexes, and information included in this directory.

The Index to Advertisers is an alphabetical listing of each display and classified advertiser, and includes the page number where the ad can be found.

Glossary of Terms

AM—Amplitude modulation.

Analog—A continuous electrical signal that carries information in the form of variable physical values, such as amplitude or frequency modulation.

Basic cable service—Package of cable programming provided to subscribers without additional fee.

Cable television—System that transmits original programming, and programming of broadcast television stations, to consumers over wired network (see page xix).

CC—Closed captioning. Method of transmitting textual information over television channel's vertical blanking interval; transmissions are deciphered with decoders; decoded transmissions appear as text superimposed over television image.

CED—Capacitance electronic disk (RCA videodisk).

Clear channel—AM radio station allowed to dominate its frequency with up to 50 kw of power; their signals are generally protected for distance of up to 750 miles at night.

Closed circuit—The method of transmission of programs or other material that limits its target audience to a specific group rather than the general public.

Coaxial cable—Cable with several common axis lines under protective sheath used for television signal transmissions.

Common carrier—Telecommunication company that provides communications transmission services to public.

DAB—Digital audio broadcasting. Modulations for sending digital rather than analog audio signals by either terrestrial or satellite transmitter with audio response up to compact disc quality (20 kHz).

DBS—Direct broadcast satellite. High powered satellite authorized to broadcast direct to homes (see page xx).

Digital—A discontinuous electrical signal that carries information in binary fashion. Data is represented by a specific sequence of off-on electrical pulses.

Downlink—Earth station used to receive signals from satellites.

Earth station—Equipment used for transmitting or receiving satellite communications.

EDTV—Enhanced-definition television. Proposed intermediate systems for evolution to full HDTV, usually including slightly improved resolution and sound, with a wider (16:9) aspect ratio.

EFT—Electronic funds transfer.

EM—Electronic mail (commonly referred to as E-mail).

Encryption—System for scrambling signals to prevent unauthorized reception.

ENG—Electronic news gathering.

ETV—Educational television.

Fiber optic cable—Wires made of glass fiber used to transmit video, audio, voice or data providing vastly wider bandwidth than standard coaxial cable.

Field—Half of the video information in the frame of a video picture. The NTSC system displays 59.94 fields per second.

FM—Frequency modulation.

Footprint—Area on earth within which a satellite's signal can be received.

Frame—A full video picture. The NTSC system displays 29.97 525-line frames per second.

Frequency—The number of cycles a signal is transmitted per second, measured in hertz.

Geostationary orbit—Orbit 22,300 miles above earth's equator where satellites circle earth at same rate earth rotates.

GHz—Gigahertz. One billion hertz (cycles) per second.

HDTV—High-definition television (see page xx).

Headend—Facility in cable system from which all signals originate. (Local and distant television stations, and satellite programming, are picked up and amplified for retransmission through system.)

Hertz—A measurement of frequency. One cycle per second equals one hertz (Hz).

HUT—Households using television.

Independent television—Television stations not affiliated with networks, and which do not use the networks as a primary source of their programming.

Interlaced scanning—Television transmission technique in which each frame is divided into two fields. NTSC system interleaves odd-numbered lines with even-numbered lines at a transmission rate of 59.94 fields per second.

ITFS—Instructional Television Fixed Service (see page xx).

kHz—Kilohertz. One thousand hertz (cycles) per second.

LED—Light emitting diode. Type of semiconductor that lights up when activated by voltage.

LO—Local origination channel.

LPTV—Low-power television (see page xx).

LV—LaserVision (optical videodisk).

MDS—Multipoint distribution service (see page xx).

MHz—Megahertz. One million hertz (cycles) per second.

Microwave—Frequencies above 1,000 MHz.

MSO—Multiple cable systems operator.

NTSC—National Television System Committee. Committee that recommended current American standard color television.

PCM—Pulse code modulation. Conversion of voice signals into digital code.

PCS—Personal Communications Service. New digital wireless telephone technology, with smaller and less expensive outdoor cells and consumer telephone sets than current cellular service. Cable television operators are among the entreprenuers for PCS. Also called PCN (Personal Communications Network).

PPV—Pay-per-view.

Progressive scanning—TV system where video frames are transmitted sequentially, unlike interlaced scanning in which frames are divided into two fields.

PSA—Public service announcment.

PTV—Public television.

Public radio—Radio stations and networks that are operated on a noncommercial basis.

Public television—Television stations and networks that operate as noncommercial ventures.

RCC—Radio common carrier. Common carriers whose major businesses include radio paging and mobile telephone services.

SCA—Subsidiary communications authorizations. Authorizations granted to FM broadcasters for using subcarriers on their channels for other communications services.

Shortwave—Transmissions on frequencies of 6-25 MHz.

SHF—Super high frequency.

Signal-to-noise ratio—The ratio between the strength of an electronically produced signal to interfering noises in the same bandwidth.

SMATV—Satellite master antenna television (see page xx).

STV—Subscription television (see page xx).

Superstation—Local television station whose signal is retransmitted via satellite to cable systems beyond reach of over-the-air signal.

Tariff—Common carrier's statement describing services it offers and rates it charges.

Teletext—A one-way electronic publishing service that can be transmitted over the vertical blanking interval of a standard television signal or the full channel of a television station or cable television system. The major use today is for closed-captioning.

Translator—Broadcast station that rebroadcasts signals of other stations without originating its own programming.

Transponder—Satellite transmitter/receiver that picks up signals transmitted from earth, translates them into new frequencies and amplifies them before retransmitting them back to ground.

UHF—Ultra high frequency.

Uplink—Earth station used for transmitting to satellite.

VCR—Videocassette recorder.

VHF—Very high frequency.

Videotext—Two-way interactive service that uses either two-way cable or telephone lines to connect a central computer to a television screen.

VTR—Video-tape recorder.

Brief History of Broadcasting and Cable

An overview of the evolution and development of radio, TV, cable, satellite and other mass communication media. Compiled by the Broadcasting news magazine staff.

One of the most dramatic developments of 20th century technology has been the use of radio waves—electromagnetic radiations traveling at the speed of light—for communication. Radio communication designed for reception by the public at large is known as "broadcasting." Radio waves of different frequencies (number of cycles per second) can be "tuned." Hence, signals from many sources can be received on a radio set without interfering with each other.

In everyday language, the term "radio" refers to aural (sound) broadcasting, which is received from amplitude-modulated (AM) or frequency-modulated (FM) stations. "Television," another form of radio, is received from stations making both visual and aural transmissions. AM radio, sometimes called standard broadcasting, was the earliest broadcast service and operates on relatively low "medium" frequencies. FM and TV are newer and occupy considerably higher frequency bands.

Radio communication was born of many minds and developments. In the 1860's, a Scottish physicist, James Clerk Maxwell, predicted the existence of radio waves. Heinrich Rudolph Hertz, a German physicist, later demonstrated that rapid variations of electric current can be projected into space in the form of waves similar to those of light and heat. (His contributions have been honored internationally by the adoption of Hertz as a synonym for cycles per second.) In 1895, an Italian engineer, Guglielmo Marconi, transmitted radio signals for a short distance, and at the turn of the century, conducted successful trans-Atlantic tests.

The first practical application of radio was for ship-to-ship and ship-to-shore telegraphic communication. Marine disasters early demonstrated the speed and effectiveness of radiotelegraphy for saving life and property at sea.

This new communication medium was first known as "wireless." American use of the term "radio" is traced to about 1912 when the Navy, feeling that "wireless" was too inclusive, adopted the word "radiotelegraph." The use of the word "broadcast" (originally a way to sow seed) stems from early U.S. naval references to "broadcast" of orders to the fleet. Now it is used to describe radio service to the public.

The origin of the first voice broadcast is a subject for debate. Claims to that distinction range from "Hello, Rainey," said to have been transmitted by Nathan B. Stubblefield to a neighbor, Rainey T. Wells, in a demonstration near Murray, Ky., in 1892, to an impromptu program from Brant Rock, Mass., by Reginald A. Fessenden in 1906, which was picked up by nearby ships.

There were other early experimental audio transmissions. Lee De Forest put singer Enrico Caruso on the air in 1910, and there were trans-Atlantic voice tests by the Bell Telephone Co. in Arlington, Va., in 1915. But it was not until after World War I that regular broadcasting began.

The identity of the "first" broadcasting station also is a matter of conflicting claims. This is due largely to the fact that some pioneer AM broadcast stations developed from experimental operations. Although KDKA Pittsburgh did not receive a regular broadcasting license until Nov. 7, 1921, it furnished programs under a different authorization before that date. Records of the Department of Commerce, which then supervised radio, indicate that the first station to receive a regular broadcasting license was WBZ, Springfield, Mass., on Sept. 15, 1921. (WBZ is now assigned to Boston.)

There was experimental network operation over telephone lines as early as 1922. In that year, WJZ (now WABC) New York and WGY Schenectady, N.Y., broadcast the World Series. Early in 1923, WEAF (now WNBC) New York and WNAC Boston picked up a football game from Chicago. Later that same year, WEAF and WGY were connected with KDKA Pittsburgh and KYW Chicago (now Philadelphia) to carry talks made at a dinner in New York. President Coolidge's message to Congress was broadcast by six stations in 1923.

In 1926, the National Broadcasting Co., a subsidiary of the Radio Corporation of America, started the first regular network with 24 stations. For its first coast-to-coast hookup, in 1927, it broadcast a football game. In that same year, the Columbia Broadcasting System, first called the Columbia Phonograph Broadcasting System, was organized.

For some years NBC operated two networks, the Red and the Blue, but when the FCC adopted chain-broadcasting rules in the early 1940's, one organization was prohibited from operating two networks serving the same area at the same time. RCA sold the Blue Network to Edward J. Noble in 1943. It ultimately became the American Broadcasting Co. (In 1968, ABC itself was given a limited exception to the dual-network rule in order to operate four radio networks, each providing a specific service.)

FM and TV broadcasting emerged from their experimental stage just before U.S. entry into World War II. Wartime restrictions retarded expansion of radio facilities, although the emergency produced new techniques and apparati that are in use today. In the decades following the war, broadcasting expanded domestically, and the development of communication satellites has opened new possibilities for international relay.

Regulation of Broadcasting

The Wireless Ship Act of 1910 applied to use of radio by ships, but the Radio Act of 1912 was the first domestic law for general control of radio. It made the Secretary of Commerce and Labor (then a single department) responsible for licensing radio stations and operators.

Early broadcasting was experimental and, therefore, noncommercial. In 1919, radiotelephone experiments were enabled to operate as "limited commercial stations." In 1922, the wavelength of 360 meters (approximately 830 kilohertz) was assigned for the transmission of "important news items, entertainment, lectures, sermons and similar matter."

Recommendations of the first National Radio Conference in 1922 resulted in further regulations by the Secretary of Commerce. A new type of AM broadcast station came into being, with minimum power of 500 watts and maximum of 1000 watts (1 kilowatt). Two frequencies (750 and 833 khz) were assigned for program transmission.

So rapid was the development of AM broadcasting that, upon recommendation of subsequent National Radio Conferences in 1923 and 1924, the Department of Commerce allocated 550 to 1500 khz for standard broadcast and authorized operating power up to 5000 watts (5 kilowatts).

Increasing numbers of AM stations caused so much interference that, in 1925, a fourth National Radio Conference asked for a limitation on broadcast time and power. The Secretary of Commerce was unable to deal with the situation because court decisions held that the Radio Act of 1912 did not give him this authority. As a result, many broadcasters changed their frequencies and increased their power and operating time at will, regardless of the effect on other stations, producing bedlam on the air.

In 1926, President Coolidge urged Congress to remedy matters. The result was the Dill-White Radio Act of 1927.

Federal Radio Commission—The Radio Act of 1927 created a five-member Federal Radio Commission to issue station licenses, allocate frequency bands to various services, assign specific frequencies to individual stations and control station power. The same act delegated to the Secretary of Commerce authority to inspect radio stations, to examine and license radio operators and to assign radio call signs.

Much of the early effort of the Federal Radio Commission was required to straighten out the confusion in the broadcast band. It was impossible to accommodate the 732 broadcast stations then operating. New regulations caused about 150 of them to surrender their licenses.

Communications Act of 1934—At the request of President Roosevelt, the Secretary of Commerce in 1933 appointed an interdepartmental committee to study electronic communications. The committee recommended that Congress establish a single agency to regulate all interstate and foreign communication by wire and radio, including telegraph, telephone and broadcast. The Communications Act of 1934 created the Federal Communications Commission for this unified regulation. This is the statute under which the FCC operates and which it enforces. Several of its provisions were taken from the earlier Radio Act.

Federal Communications Commission—The FCC began operating on July 11, 1934, as an independent federal agency headed by seven commissioners, who are appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. Under legislation passed in 1982, the FCC was cut back to five commissioners in June 1983.

FCC Broadcast Regulation—One of the FCC's major activities is the regulation of broadcasting. This has three phases.

The first is the allocation of space in the radio frequency spectrum to the broadcast services and to many nonbroadcast services which also must be accommodated. In view of the tremendously increased use of radio technology in recent decades, the competing demands for frequencies are among the commission's most pressing problems. Fortunately, as technology has advanced, frequencies higher and higher in the spectrum have become usable. Apart from the frequencies used for broadcasting, frequencies in other portions of the spectrum are allocated for "broadcast auxiliary" use by remote pickup and other transmitters auxiliary to main broadcast stations (see Auxiliary Broadcast Services).

The second phase of regulation is the assignment of stations in each service within the allocated frequency bands, with specific location, frequency and power. The chief consideration, although by no means the only one, is to avoid interference with other stations on the same channel (frequency) or channels adjacent in the spectrum. If an application is granted, the applicant for a new station or for changed facilities receives a construction permit. Later, when the station is built and it is capable of operating as proposed, a license to operate is issued.

The third phase is regulation of existing stations: inspection to see that stations are operating in accordance with FCC rules and technical provisions of their authorizations, modifying the authorizations when necessary, assigning station call letters, licensing transmitter operators, processing requests to assign the station license to another party or transfer control of the licensee corporation and processing applications for renewal of license. At renewal time, the commission reviews the station's record to see if it is operating in the public interest.

Although educational and other noncommercial stations share the airwaves, the American broadcasting system for the most part is a commercial system. In this respect it is supported by revenues from those who advertise goods or services to the audience. Advertising messages are presented as commercial "spot announcements" before, during and after programs, or as a part of "sponsored" programs.

Broadcast stations are licensed to serve the public interest, convenience and necessity. By law, each license must contain a statement that the licensee does not have any right to operate the station or use the frequency beyond the term of license. The maximum term of license for a radio station is seven years; the maximum term of license for a television station is five years.

Under requirements of the Communications Act, applicants must be legally, technically and financially qualified, and they must show that their proposed operation would be in the public interest. They must be citizens of the United States. Corporations with alien officers or directors or with more than one-fifth of the capital stock controlled by foreign interests may not be licensed.

Penalties for violation of FCC rules by broadcast stations, depending upon the degree of seriousness, range from reprimands, fines and short-term probationary licenses to denial of license renewal, or even license revocation. Cease-and-desist orders may also be issued.

In 1965, the commission provided for public inspection of certain records of broadcast stations in the communities they serve. These are mainly duplicate copies of records in the public files of the commission in Washington, and include licenses, records of ownership, applications to the FCC and related material, network affiliation contracts and employment reports.

The commission is forbidden by law from censoring programs. The Communications Act, Section 326, states: "Nothing in this Act shall be understood or construed to give the commission the power of censorship over the radio communications of signals transmitted by any radio station, and no regulation or condition shall be promulgated or fixed by the commission which shall interfere with the right of free speech by means of radio communication." Despite the prohibition, the federal government has promulgated limited rules and laws regulating content of broadcast stations.

Fairness Doctrine—In a highly controversial move, the FCC voted in August 1987 to eliminate the fairness doctrine, which required broadcast stations to air issues of public importance and to present all sides of the issues. While most broadcasters cheered the action as one that elevated their First Amendment standing, many members of Congress called for resurrection of doctrine in federal law.

Only the general fairness doctrine was repealed. The fairness corollaries—the personal attack rule and the political editorializing rule—are still on the books. Broadcast organizations have petitioned for their deletion, but thus far the FCC has failed to act.

The doctrine stems from a policy on editorializing announced in 1949, and supported by a 1959 amendment to the Communications Act. It obligates broadcasters "to afford reasonable opportunity for the discussion of conflicting views of public importance." In 1967, the commission adopted specific rules requiring stations to notify persons when personal attacks were made on them in discussion of controversial public issues (with certain exceptions such as newscasts). The same requirement was also applied to station editorials endorsing or opposing a political candidate. These rules were upheld by the Supreme Court in 1969.

Section 315—Section 315 of the Communications Act provides: (a) "If any licensee shall permit any person who is a legally qualified candidate for any public office to use a broadcasting station, he shall afford equal opportunities to all other such candidates for that office in the use of such broadcasting station; provided that such licensee shall have no power of censorship over the material broadcast under the provisions of this section. No obligation is hereby imposed upon any licensee to allow the use of its station by any such candidate ... (b) The charges made for the use of any broadcast station for any of the purposes set forth in this section shall not exceed the charges made for comparable use of such station for other purposes ..." In 1959, the act was amended to exempt from the equal-time requirement appearances by candidates on newscasts, news interviews and other news coverage.

A problem in connection with this statute is that it requires a station presenting one candidate to afford equal opportunities to "all" other legally qualified candidates for the same office, including, often, some who have no chance of prevailing in the election. In 1960, Congress suspended this requirement for the presidential election, thus making possible the broadcast debates between the Democratic and Republican candidates without stations having to give equal time to the numerous other presidential candidates representing small parties. A similar provision on a permanent basis is contained in legislation passed by Congress in September 1970.

Advertising—Congress passed a law late in 1990 that limits the amount of advertising in children's TV programming (12.5 minutes per hour on weekends and 10.5 minutes per hour on weekdays). The FCC had eliminated advertising time limits for all types of programming in 1984 as part of a general deregulation of TV broadcasting.

Stations and producers of advertising are expected to cooperate in controlling the sound volume (loudness) of commercials.

"Payola" and "rigged quiz shows"—Revelations about programs in the late 1950's led to amendments to the Communications Act in 1960. These made more explicit a station's obligation to make an announcement when money or other consideration is received for the presentation of broadcast material (e.g., money received by a disk jockey for playing a record). They made illegal the presentation of programs purporting to be contests of knowledge or skill where the result is in any way prearranged.

Lotteries and fraud—Congress, in January 1975, modified the law to permit the broadcasting of information or advertisements on a lawful state-operated lottery by stations in that state or adjacent states. A month later, the FCC amended its rules to conform to the changes. The U.S. Criminal Code prohibits broadcasting of lotteries other than state-operated. To be regarded as a "lottery," a giveaway arrangement must involve a prize, chance and "consideration." A number of commission and court decisions have dealt with these concepts in particular situations, especially as to what is "consideration." (It has been held, for instance, that having to go in a particular store or listen to a particular program is not "consideration.")

Indecency—Broadcasting of obscene or indecent programming is against the law. Enforcement of the obscenity prohibition is up to the Justice Department, but it is left to the FCC to take care of indecency.

In 1978, the Supreme Court affirmed the FCC's authority to act against stations that broadcast indecency during times when the likelihood of children being in the audience was high. It was not until April 1987 that the FCC began enforcing the law in earnest, however. Since then, it has generated a small, but steady, stream of fines against stations.

Congress adopted an around-the-clock ban against indecency in 1988. But the law, which seems to fly in the face of the 1978 Supreme Court decision, is being challenged in court by broadcast organizations and First Ammendment advocates.

Networks—The commission does not license networks as such, only individual stations. Station licensees are subject to the chain broadcasting regulations adopted by the commission in 1941 to further competition in broadcasting. These rules have been supplemented by further regulations adopted from time to time.

The principal regulations affecting broadcast networks are the financial interest and syndication rules, which limit networks' ability to own and syndicate the programming they air.

After one of the longest and most bitter fights the FCC has ever experienced, the agency voted in April 1991 to relax the rules. That was little solace to the networks, who believed that the rules were unwarranted and should have been repealed in their entirety.

Producers and syndicators, on the other hand, cheered the FCC decision to preserve the essence of the rules, saying it would protect them from the enormous economic power the networks derive from their control of the prime time TV audience.

Monopoly—One of the commission's foremost concerns is promotion of diversification in the broadcast media, avoiding monopoly or undue concentration of control. Commission rules prohibit the same person or group from operating more than one station in the same service (AM, FM or TV) in the same locality. They also limit to 12 the number of stations in the same service that may be commonly owned in the nation as a whole. The TV stations may not operate in markets collectively containing more than 25% of the nation's TV homes. Licensees are now also prohibited from owning an AM and a TV station in the same locality, although the FCC in 1988 implemented a liberal waiver policy that has resulted in a number of news radio-TV combinations. Also prohibited: broadcast networks owning cable systems and common ownership of TV stations and newspapers or TV stations and cable systems in the same market.

In what came to be known as an "attic-to-basement" review of broadcast regulations, the FCC in 1991 launched two proceedings to re-examine the desirability and need for its structual regulations as the number of failed radio stations mounted and the loss of broadcast TV audiences to cable continued to increase.

Receivers—The advent of "wireless" prompted amateurs and others interested in listening in on Morse code radiotelegraph transmissions to acquire receiving sets. Homemade sets with crystal detectors gradually gave way to commercially manufactured receivers. Then the rise of broadcasting aroused public interest in owning sets, battery-operated at first, to receive regular programs. Receivers operated by house current came on the market about 1928. Development of the transistor in 1948 led to their use in place of tubes in sets. Successive stages in TV receiver development have taken sets from black-and-white to color, and VHF-only to all-channel (VHF and UHF) capability (see chapter on TV Broadcast).

The commission does not license receivers. However, it does require manufacturers to limit radiation that may interfere with radio or TV reception.

Call letters—International agreement provides for national identification of a radio station by the first letter or first two letters of its assigned call signal, and for this purpose the alphabet is apportioned among nations. Broadcast stations in the United States use call letters beginning with K or W. Generally, those beginning with K are assigned to stations west of the Mississippi River while W is assigned east of the Mississippi.

During radio's infancy, most of the broadcast stations were in the East. As inland stations developed, the Mississippi River was made the dividing line between K and W calls. However, KDKA Pittsburgh and some other eastern stations authorized before this system went into effect have retained their K calls, and similarly some pioneer stations west of the Mississippi have kept their W calls. Most of the early broadcast call signs contained only three letters. These combinations were soon exhausted and stations were assigned four-letter calls. Since many AM licensees also operate FM and TV stations, a common practice is to use the AM call letters followed by "-FM" or "-TV."

National Defense—In cooperation with military and civil defense agencies, the commission has established the Emergency Broadcast System, based on voluntary participation by the broadcast industry. EBS facilities are for the primary purpose of giving emergency warning and advice to the public in event of attack, but they are put to peacetime use in alerting audiences to serious weather and other emergencies threatening life and property.

Broadcast Operation

Frequencies and Station Assignments—Radio frequencies differ in characteristics, and each service is assigned to a frequency band to suit its needs.

The AM aural service, sometimes called standard broadcast, occupies the band from 535 khz to 1705 khz. Radio waves travel with the same speed as light, and are of different "frequencies" (cycles per second) and "wavelengths" (distance between points in successive cycles). "Frequency" and "wavelength" vary inversely with each other. The latter term was formerly used generally to describe a particular radio wave, and still is in some other countries; but in the United States the use of "frequency" is much more common. The usable frequency spectrum has constantly expanded upward with developing technology, so that what were once "high" frequencies are near the low end of the total spectrum used. AM stations are assigned at 10 khz intervals beginning at 540 khz.

FM broadcasting occupies the frequencies from 88 to 108 mhz, with 100 channels of 200 khz width each, the lowest 20 of them reserved for educational use. Both the center frequency (e.g., "93.1 mhz") and the designated channel number from 201 to 300 are used (e.g., "channel 201" is "88.1 mhz"), although channel numbers are not in popular usage since they are not on FM receivers.

In television, where wider channels are required to carry both picture and sound, each channel is 6 mhz wide. The very high frequency (VHF) portion of the television service occupies the frequencies 54 to 72 mhz (channels 2, 3 and 4), 76 to 88 mhz (channels 5 and 6) and 174 to 216 mhz (channels 7 through 13). The ultra high frequency (UHF) portion of the television service occupies the frequencies from 470 to 890 mhz (channels 14 through 83). Designated channel numbers identify the frequency assignments (e.g., 54-60 mhz is "Channel 2"). There is no "channel 1" in television.

Although "AM" and "FM" are often used to refer to the standard broadcast and FM broadcast services, these terms more properly apply to the methods, "amplitude modulation" and "frequency modulation," used to impress aural or visual intelligence on the carrier wave. The "AM" principle is used not only in the standard broadcast service but also in the picture portion of television and in the international "shortwave" service. The "FM" principle is used both in the FM broadcast service and in the sound portion of television.

In all the broadcast services, the same aural or visual channel can be used in different places if the stations are far enough apart not to interfere with one another or with stations on adjacent or technically related channels. A TV station may be required to "offset" 10 khz above or below its normal carrier frequency. The channel assigned to such a station is then designated "plus" or "minus" as the case may be. This makes more TV assignments possible and reduces the possibility of interference.

AM and FM systems—Without being too technical, this is how an aural station works:

A person talks into a microphone as if it were a telephone. His voice sets up vibrations of varying intensity and frequency. The lower the pitch the slower the vibration. A cycle, or wavelength, is one complete performance of a vibration.

In the microphone, these vibrations are converted into electrical impulses which are then greatly amplified at the transmitter before being put on the "carrier" wave. The intensity and frequency of the carrier wave are constant. This wave, by itself, does not transmit music or speech, so it is varied to correspond with fluctuations of the speech or music received at the microphone. This is called "modulation."

In AM broadcast, the audio waves are impressed on the carrier wave in a manner to cause its amplitude (or power) to vary with the audio waves. The frequency of the carrier remains constant. This is known as amplitude modulation. In frequency modulation (FM), the amplitude remains unchanged but the frequency is varied in a manner corresponding to the voice or music to be transmitted.

These modulated waves radiate from the antenna tower at approximately 186,000 miles per second (the speed of light). Some of them follow the contour of the ground and are called "groundwaves." Others dart upward and are called "skywaves." At night, the skywave portions of transmissions in the standard broadcast (AM) frequencies are reflected back to earth by electrical particles in the "ionosphere" portion of the atmosphere. This gives the listener a choice of more distant AM stations at night, but also increases interference. Daytime reception is largely dependent upon groundwaves.

Radio waves may pass through buildings and other objects but are subject to absorption or interference. As in the case of ripples on water, radio vibrations weaken with distance. Seasonal disturbances and sunspot periods can throw them off course and cause "freak" reception.

AM broadcast stations use "medium waves." That is to say, they transmit 540,000 to 1,600,000 waves a second, or 540 to 1600 khz. At 540,000 waves a second, the distance between waves is approximately 1,800 feet.

The so-called "shortwave" (international long-distance) broadcast stations transmit in the frequency range 6 mhz to 25 mhz. These waves are sent out one after another so rapidly that the distance between their crests (wave length) is only about 37 to 150 feet.

FM and TV stations, broadcasting in the very high and ultra high frequencies, send out even shorter, or very short, waves. (The word "shortwave" came into use before there was technology to use these other parts of the spectrum.)

The modulated radio wave from the radio station is picked up by the home receiving antenna. In other words, the wave sets up in the receiving antenna a current having the same frequency characteristics as the one transmitted. In the receiver, the audio and carrier waves are separated by a device called a detector or demodulator. The carrier wave, no longer needed, is dissipated while the audio wave is relayed to the loudspeaker where it is transformed back into the sound that is heard by the listener. (Television operation is discussed in TV Broadcast.)

Stereophonic Service—Stereophony is not really a 20th century innovation but dates back to experiments performed over wire lines by telephone engineers in the 1880's. Even at that time, contemporary accounts spoke of being able to "localize" a singer's position on an opera stage by virtue of the signal strength in either the right or left telephone. Over the next few decades, there were other experiments in transmitting binaural sound, but the general impetus to development came only with post-World War II technology in which multiplexing techniques were applied to FM broadcasting. In 1959, the National Stereophonic Radio Committee was created to examine the many proposed systems of FM stereo and submit a final recommendation to the commission. In the summer of 1960, six systems were field tested over KDKA-FM (now WPNT) Pittsburgh, with receivers set up at Uniontown, Pa. The system of stereo transmission proposed by the General Electric Co. and the Zenith Corp. was adopted, with broadcasting authorized to start on June 1, 1961. The FCC authorized AM stereo in 1982, but refused to select a standard from among five incompatible systems. In July 1982, KDKA(AM) Pittsburgh and KTSA(AM) San Antonio, Tex., began AM stereo programming with a Kahn system, the first to win FCC acceptance. The Motorola system ultimately emerged as the most popular system. But by late 1990 most AM stations continued to broadcast in the mono mode, reflecting in part the service's shift to news/talk formats.

Television stereo was approved by the FCC in spring 1984. Although the FCC did not adopt a single standard, it did provide interference protection for an industry committee-selected Zenith/dbx transmission system. The authorization allowed not only for stereocasts, but also a second audio program channel for bilingual or narrative broadcasts and a third channel for professional uses. Noncommercial WTTW(TV) Chicago became the first stereo TV broadcaster in August 1984. Within one year, 100 stations were providing multichannel sound. TV stereo is now commonplace.

Transmitting Antenna—In the AM service, antenna height above ground is not usually a matter of much importance. The entire antenna structure acts as the antenna and usually varies in height with the frequency of the transmission. Few AM antennas exceed 1,000 feet in height and most are considerably less. By contrast, in FM and TV, where transmission follows "line of sight," service depends on the location of the receiver in relation to the transmitting antenna. Here, antenna height is extremely important. While FM and TV antennas themselves are short, they are often situated, for greater overall height, atop natural or man-made structures, such as tall buildings, mountain tops, or tall towers specifically built for this purpose.

In the interest of safe air navigation, authorizations for broadcast transmitting antennas must usually be coordinated with the Federal Aviation Administration. Those over a certain height (usually 200 feet) must be painted and lighted. To further minimize the hazard to air traffic, shared use of tall towers, or location of all tall antennas of a given area on an "antenna farm" is encouraged.

Radio and TV broadcasters must also limit public and occupational exposure to radio frequency radiation emissions from antenna towers. Following enactment of new regulations by the FCC in January 1986, exposure levels will be routinely considered for construction permits of new or modified facilities and for renewal applications. The rules also apply to TV translators, low power TV, satellite earth station transmitters and experimental stations.

"Directional antennas" consist of more than one radiating element (the tower in AM), with phasing of the radiation from a series of towers so arranged that radiations cancel each other in some directions and reinforce each other in other directions. Sometimes they are used to increase radiation and service in a particular direction. More commonly, the purpose is to restrict radiation in one or more directions, usually to avoid interference to other stations.

As AM stations began to multiply on shared channels, it became necessary to employ directional antennas to prevent interference. Since 1937, directional antennas have helped new stations squeeze into the congested AM broadcast band. Most full-time (day and night) AM stations operate directionally at night. Directional antenna arrays can produce "figure eight" and more complicated service patterns. A complete array may include 12 towers. Directional antennas also are used in international communication and microwave relay to beam transmissions to particular points. Some FM and TV stations now use directional antennas.

AM Broadcast

AM is the oldest system of broadcasting. The pioneer AM service started operation on the 535 - 1605 khz band. In a sweeping reform of the service in 1991, the AM extended the upper end of the band to 1705 khz.

Classes of AM Stations—As part of its reforms, the FCC adopted a new classification system.

Classes of AM broadcast channels and stations—Clear channel. A clear channel is one on which stations are assigned to serve wide areas. These stations are protected from objectionable interference within their primary service areas and, depending on the class of the station, their secondary service areas. Stations operating on these channels are classified as follows:

(1) Class A station. A Class A station is an unlimited time station that operates on a clear channel and is designed to render primary and secondary service over an extended area and at relatively long distances from its transmitter. Its primary service area is protected from objectionable interference from other stations on the same and adjacent channels, and its secondary service area is protected from interference from other stations on the same channel. The operating power shall not be less than 10 kw nor more than 50 kw.

(2) Class B station. A Class B station is an unlimited time station which is designed to render service only over a primary service area. Class B stations are authorized to operate with a minimum power of 250 watts and a maximum power of 50 kw or 10 kw for stations that are authorized to operate in the 1605-1705 khz band.

(3) Class D station. A Class D station operates either daytime, limited time or unlimited time with nighttime power less than 250 watts. Class D stations shall operate with daytime powers not less than 250 watts nor more than 50 kw. Nighttime operations of Class D stations are not afforded protection and must protect all Class A and Class B operations during nighttime hours. New Class D stations that had not been previously licensed as Class B will not be authorized.

Regional Channel. A regional channel is one on which Class B and Class D stations may operate and serve primarily a principal center of population and the rural area contiguous thereto.

Local Channel. A local channel is one on which stations operate unlimited time and serve primarily a community and the suburban and rural areas immediately contiguous thereto.

(4) Class C station. A Class C station is a station operating on a local channel and is designed to render service only over a primary service area that may be reduced if found to cause interference with other stations. The power shall not be less than 250 watts, nor more than 1 kw. Class C stations that are licensed to operate with 100 watts may continue to do so.

Day and Night Service—Of the two types of signals—groundwave and skywave—groundwave service is steadier, more reliable and is called "primary" service. Skywave or "secondary" service is available at night because skywave signals, lost in the daylight, are reflected from the ionosphere. Since skywaves cover tremendous distances, Class A stations can render skywave service across 700 miles or more. This service is subject to "fading," varying with changes in such factors as time of day, weather, latitude, atmospheric noise and sunspot activity, hence the name "secondary." Because of the high power and extent of protection required for skywave signals to afford useful service, only Class A stations are authorized for skywave service.

Because skywave transmission is a factor in the AM frequencies at night, the number of AM stations operating at night must be limited. Therefore, slightly more than half of U.S. AM stations are licensed for daytime-only operation, sunrise to sunset, although on many frequencies most of them are also permitted to operate, usually with reduced power, starting at 6 a.m. when that is before sunrise (so-called "presunrise" operation). More than 2,000 such stations may operate up to two hours after local sunset.

In the early 1960s, the AM band was experiencing congestion and interference. At the same time, some service needs, such as night-time primary service to large portions of the country, were not being met. Therefore, in 1964, the assignment rules for new AM stations, or for more powerful facilities, were tightened to prevent interference and preserve the AM potential for more efficient use.

Facilities authorized from 1964 to 1968 involved minimal interference and provided the first local radio outlets for a number of communities. Still, there were unfulfilled service needs, particularly at night, and so in July 1968, the commission stopped accepting AM applications while it studied how to utilize the limited potential for new stations in the AM band. At that time, there were 4,215 AM stations on the air in this country; another 100 that had been previously authorized were expected to come on the air in succeeding months. There were more than twice as many AM as FM stations on the air.

The next year, new rules were proposed under which the commission would, to a greater extent, regard AM and FM as a single aural service. New AM stations would be authorized only where they would bring a primary service to a substantial area not receiving such service from existing AM or FM stations, and would not be granted if an FM channel were available which would bring the same service benefits. FM development would be encouraged because of technical qualities of this service, including ample nighttime coverage and relative lack of interference when new stations were added.

FM Broadcast

Frequency modulation broadcast has several advantages over the older amplitude modulation. FM has higher fidelity characteristics and is freer of static, fading and background overlapping of other stations.

FM's greater tonal range is due primarily to the fact that it uses a wider channel than that employed for AM broadcast. Then, too, it occupies a higher portion of the radio spectrum where there is less static and other noise than at lower frequencies. FM receivers have the particular ability to suppress weaker stations and other interference.

Since the frequencies on which FM operates do not ordinarily reflect back to earth from ionospheric layers (in skywaves), it is possible for many scattered FM stations to use the same frequency without interference, night or day, unlike the AM band.

History—The principle of frequency modulation has long been known, but its advantages for broadcasting were not realized until shortly before World War II. Largely as a result of interest evoked by extensive developmental work by Edwin H. Armstrong in the 1930's, the commission authorized increased FM experimentation, and in 1940, after extensive public hearings, provided for FM operation to start Jan. 1, 1941. It set apart 35 channels for commercial and five channels for noncommercial educational FM.

On Oct. 31, 1940, the commission granted construction permits for the first 15 FM stations. By the end of that year, there were 10 more. Though all radio construction was frozen during World War II, more than 40 prewar FM stations continued to serve some 400,000 receivers.

FM stations were initially assigned call letters with numerals added, but in 1943 the present letter system was adopted. There is optional use of the suffix "FM" to distinguish these stations from jointly operated AM stations.

Because of skywave interference experienced on the original FM band of 42-50 mhz per second, the commission in 1945 moved FM to its present higher and less vulnerable position of 88-108 mhz. At the same time, it increased the number of channels to 100, providing 80 for commercial and 20 for noncommercial educational use.

FM Zones and Classes—In 1962, the commission revised its commercial FM rules to divide the country into three zones (instead of the previous two). Zone I includes part or all of 18 northeastern states, plus the District of Columbia; Zone I-A is limited to Southern California, and Zone II includes the rest of the country.

Three classes of commercial FM stations (instead of the previous two) were created. Class A stations are assigned to all zones; Class B stations are assigned to Zones I and I-A, and Class C stations are assigned to Zone II.

Class A stations are low-powered with a maximum of 6 kw effective radiated power. The maximum power for Class B stations is 50 kw and for Class C, 100 kw.

An important factor in FM operation is the height of the antenna above surrounding terrain (see earlier section on Transmitting Antennas, line-of-sight transmission). Therefore, stations have maximum antenna heights in relation to power; 300 feet above average terrain for Class A, 500 feet for Class B and 2,000 feet for Class C. If the antenna height above average terrain is greater, power must be reduced commensurately. Minimum power requirements are also prescribed.

FM reception varies with location of the receiver in relation to the transmitting antenna. With maximum power and antenna height, good service extends about 15 miles for Class A stations, 33 miles for Class B, and 64 miles for Class C. The rules also include minimum mileage separations between stations on the same or adjacent channels. This is to protect the service from interference.

Subsidiary FM Service—To aid FM broadcasters, the commission in 1955 enabled them to apply for subsidiary communications authorizations for supplemental service such as background music. Sometimes called "functional music," this specialized service is offered to stores, factories and other business subscribers.

Originally, subsidiary communications were permitted on a simplex basis, the station devoting part of the time on its channel to regular broadcasting and part to this specialized service. Later, rules were adopted requiring subsidiary communications to be on a multiplex basis, that is, using one or more subchannels with the main channel used for regular broadcasting. The FCC permits FM broadcasters to use their subcarriers for a broad variety of new services.

TV Broadcast

Television broadcasting is synchronous transmission of visual and aural programs. The picture phase is accomplished by sending a rapid succession of electrical impulses which the receiver transforms into scenes and images. Here is a brief explanation of a complex process.

Monochrome—The scene to be televised is focused on a special tube in the television camera which has a small "screen" covered with about 367,000 microscopic dots of a special photo-sensitive substance. This can be likened to a tiny motion picture screen and is called a "mosaic." The varying light from each part of the scene being televised falls upon these dots and gives them an electrical charge, the strength depending upon the amount of light falling upon the individual dots. Thus each dot becomes a tiny storage battery and the scene is formed in a pattern of electrical charges on the mosaic.

The mosaic is "scanned" by a tiny beam of electrons, no larger than the head of a pin, moving from left to right and progressing downward (just as the printed page is read by the human eye). This complete process is repeated 60 times per second, and the horizontal lines of alternate scanning are interlaced so that 30 complete pictures or "frames" composed of 525 horizontal lines are produced each second.

As the electron beam strikes each dot on the mosaic, the dot is discharged through the electron beam and the electrical impulses produced are used to modulate the signals of the TV transmitter. Each time the dots are discharged by the electron beam they are recharged by the light produced by the succeeding scene falling upon them. The succession of individual "still" scenes creates the illusion of motion just as in the case of motion pictures made on film.

The reproduction by the TV receiver of the pictures transmitted is just the reverse of the transmission. The incoming succession of electrical impulses is separated from the "carrier" and, after amplification, is impressed on the picture tube grid and progresses downward on the face of the picture tube.

The face of the tube is coated with a material which fluoresces or gives off light at the point where it is struck by the electron beam. In the absence of a television signal, the whole face of the picture tube is illuminated equally by a series of closely spaced horizontal lines. When a TV signal is placed on the grid of the picture tube, it controls the strength of the electron beam and hence the amount of light on the face of the tube. If the scanning of the electron beam in the picture tube is kept in perfect step with the scanning of the electron beam in the TV camera, the picture tube will reproduce the lights and shadows of the subject scene, and the succession of such scenes produces the illusion of motion.

In brief, the picture seen by the viewer is actually produced by a flickering spot of light moving rapidly across and down the face of the picture tube. The viewer sees the "whole" picture because the screen continues to glow for a tiny fraction of a second after the electron beam has passed. Coupled with the retentive ability of the eye, this creates the illusion that the picture is there all the time. The high rate of repetition of the picture produced by the beam minimizes flicker and lends smoothness to motion.

The TV transmitter is, in effect, two separate units. One sends out the picture and the other the sound. Visual transmission is by amplitude modulation. Sound transmission is by frequency modulation.

Color—In color TV, a brightness component is transmitted in much the same manner as the black-and-white picture signal is sent. In addition, a color component is transmitted at the same time on a subcarrier frequency located between the visual and aural carrier frequencies.

Color standards are based on a simultaneous system of color transmission, Signals representing red, blue and green are transmitted simultaneously. These are the "primary colors," and when they are combined in various amounts, they produce all other colors. A magnifying-glass examination of the scene on a receiver will reveal that it is made up only of red, blue and green dots, no matter what color is being shown. Even scenes not transmitted in color and seen as varying shades of gray to white are made up of red, blue and green dots.

Only color receivers have the special picture tubes and the necessary circuitry to illuminate the colored dots. Under the "compatible color" system, color programs can be received in black-and-white on monochrome sets, and black-and-white programs can be received as they are on color sets.

TV History—Men of many lands contributed to the development of television. Like aural radio, TV was made possible by electronic discoveries in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. In 1884, Paul Nipkow, a German, patented a scanning disk for transmitting pictures by wireless. In this country, Charles F. Jenkins began his study of the subject about 1890. The English physicist, E.E. Fournier d'Albe, conducted experiments in the early 1900's. In 1915, Marconi predicted "visible telephone."

In 1923, physicist Vladimir Zworykin, a Russian-born American, applied for a patent on the iconoscope camera tube. In the years following, there were experiments by E.F.W. Alexanderson and Philo T. Farnsworth in this country and John L. Baird in England. An experimental TV program, in which Secretary of Commerce Herbert Hoover participated, was sent by wire between New York and Washington by the Bell Telephone Laboratories in 1927. The next year Bell experimentally televised outdoor programs.

The Federal Radio Commission (predecessor of the Federal Communications Commission) reported that a few broadcast stations were experimenting with television in 1928. In that year, WGY Schenectady, N.Y., broadcast the first TV drama. Large-screen TV was demonstrated by Radio Corp. of America (now RCA Corp.) at a New York theater in 1930. RCA tested outdoor TV pickup at Camden, N.J., in 1936.

By 1937, there were 17 experimental TV stations operating. The first incumbent U.S. President seen on TV was Franklin D. Roosevelt, when he opened the New York World's Fair in 1939. That year saw the first telecast of a major league baseball game, a college football game and a professional boxing match. In 1940, the Republican and Democratic conventions were first televised. Pioneer use of coaxial cable for long-distance relay was made for the Republican convention.

The first President's message to Congress over network TV was that of Harry S Truman in 1950. The first TV debate between presidential candidates was in 1960 between John F. Kennedy and Richard M. Nixon. The first presidential message to Congress televised in color was that of President Lyndon B. Johnson in 1966.

Early Commercial Operation—The Journal Co. of Milwaukee, now licensee of WTMJ-TV, filed the first application to broadcast TV on a commercial basis. At a 1940 hearing the FCC found industry divided on technology and standards, but a committee appointed to work on the questions reached agreement on the present standards of 525 lines and 30 frames per second, and on April 30, 1941, the commission authorized commercial TV operations to start the following July 1 on 10 commercial stations which were on the air by May 1942, six continuing during the war.

In 1945 the commission allocated 13 VHF channels between 44 and 216 mhz for commercial television, but it noted that there was not enough spectrum space below 300 mhz for an adequate nationwide system. Twelve of the VHF channels had to be shared with nonbroadcast two-way radio services. To prepare for TV expansion, the UHF frequencies between 480 and 920 mhz were made available for experimental TV and those between 1245 and 1325 mhz for TV relay.

In 1948, because of interference with commercial TV, the VHF sharing was ended. TV channel 1 (44-50 mhz) was deleted and assigned to land mobile or two-way radio service.

TV Proceedings 1948-1951—As the commission had foreseen, it was increasingly evident that the available channels were too few for nationwide service. On Sept. 30, 1948, the commission stopped granting new TV applications in order to study the situation. This was the so-called TV "freeze" order. On July 11, 1949, comprehensive changes were proposed to improve and extend TV service. These included engineering standards, opening UHF channels for TV, consideration of color systems, reservation of channels for noncommercial educational use and a national assignment plan for all channels.

Color was considered first. Three competitive systems were offered for commission consideration. They were the "field sequential" system of Columbia Broadcasting System, the RCA "dot sequential" system and the Color Television Inc. "line sequential" system. The commission found that the field sequential system was the only one that met its criteria for color operation, even though this system could not be received in monochrome on existing receivers (the others claimed theirs could). This method of operation was adopted in 1950, but the door was left open for development of a better system.

CBS began limited color broadcasts on June 25, 1951, but ran into problems. Because of a materials shortage, Defense Mobilization Chief Charles E. Wilson, in October 1951, requested the suspension of manufacture of color TV sets for the public and interest in the field sequential system lagged.

Thereafter, new standards for "compatible color," receivable both in color and monochrome, were developed by RCA and advocated by the industry through its National Television System Committee. These standards were adopted by the commission on Dec. 17, 1953.

Freeze Lifted 1952—On April 14, 1952, the commission reopened TV to expansion. It added 70 UHF channels (between 470 and 890 mhz) to the 12 VHF channels (54-216 mhz). It adopted a table making more than 2,000 channel assignments to nearly 1,300 communities. These included 242 assignments for noncommercial educational use.

The minimum effective radiated visual power of TV stations was set at 100 watts. The maximum varies with antenna height. (No minimum height above average terrain is specified.) On VHF channels 2-6, maximum power is 100 kw; on channels 7-13 it is 316 kw; and on UHF channels 14-83 it is 5000 kw. With very high antennas, the amount of power is reduced.

Separation of stations on the same channels is determined by three geographic zones. In Zone I, minimum co-channel separation is 170 miles for VHF channels and 155 for UHF. This zone covers Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Jersey, Maryland, Pennsylvania, Delaware, District of Columbia, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and parts of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, New York, Virginia, West Virginia, Michigan and Wisconsin.

In Zone II, minimum co-channel separation is 190 miles for VHF and 175 miles for UHF channels. This zone includes Kentucky, Tennessee, North and South Carolina, Missouri, Iowa, Minnesota, Arkansas, Kansas, Nebraska, Oklahoma, North and South Dakota, Utah, Idaho, Arizona, New Mexico, Montana, Wyoming, Nevada, Colorado, Oregon, Washington, California, Alaska, Hawaii and parts of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, New York, Virginia, West Virginia, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Michigan, Wisconsin and Texas.

In Zone III, the separation is 220 miles for VHF and 205 miles for UHF channels. This zone includes Florida and parts of Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi and Texas.

The first commercial TV grants after the freeze were made July 11, 1952, to three Denver stations. The first commercial UHF station to go on the air was KPTV Portland, Ore., on Sept. 20, 1952.

TV Service—Commercial TV stations are required to broadcast at least 28 hours a week, at least two hours every day, although they are allowed a shorter schedule when they begin operation.

TV service may be expanded to new areas through use of "satellite" stations—regular stations largely rebroadcasting the programs of parent stations—and "translators," lower power automatic installations which pick up and rebroadcast programs of parent stations on a different frequency. The rules also provide that UHF stations may use "boosters," low-power stations rebroadcasting on the same frequency, to fill in "shadow" areas within their normal service areas. These have not proved satisfactory and none are now in operation. Rebroadcasting requires the consent of the originating stations.

Unlike AM networking over ordinary telephone wires, TV networking requires special relay adjuncts. Network TV was made possible in large measure by the development of coaxial cable and microwave relay facilities. As early as 1937, motion pictures were televised and sent over the coaxial cable link between New York and Philadelphia. Network operation was begun by WNBT (now WNBC-TV) New York City, WRGB Schenectady, and WPTZ (now KYW-TV) Philadelphia in 1944.

Regular coaxial-cable relay service was inaugurated between Washington and New York in 1946. The following year microwave relay service was extended as far as Boston. A Midwestern relay system, opened in 1948, was joined with the Eastern system in 1949. The first link in the transcontinental relay system was opened between New York and Chicago in 1950. It reached San Francisco the following year and on Sept. 4, 1951, it carried telecasts of the Japanese peace treaty conference there.

Today, all three broadcast networks are using satellites to distribute programming to many of their affiliates. Of the three, NBC has the most extensive satellite network. It serves directly via satellite more than 170 of its affiliates.

UHF Development—Economic and technical problems have impeded full utilization of the UHF channels. Because of the large number of VHF-only receivers originally in use, advertisers preferred VHF stations which limited UHF revenues.

In 1956, the commission outlined plans to promote comparable TV facilities as a means of extending service throughout the nation. In the years following, it considered and rejected the idea of moving all or most of TV to the UHF band. It sought the cooperation of industry to find ways to increase the range of UHF stations. It made certain areas all-UHF and took other steps to put UHF and VHF on a more competitive basis. In 1966, it revised the table of channel assignments to make additional UHF assignments.

Public Broadcasting

AM—Educational institutions were among the pioneers in experimental broadcasting, and held many early AM licenses.

By 1925, educational groups had 171 AM licenses. For various reasons, notably the increased competition from commercial broadcasting, most of these stations were off the air by 1934 when the FCC was created. However, there are still two dozen educational stations operating in the AM broadcast band, although there are no longer any educational allocations there (see section on FM below).

As directed by Section 307(c) of the Communications Act, the commission in 1934 studied a proposal that Congress allocate fixed percentages of radio facilities for nonprofit programs. On Jan. 22, 1935, the FCC recommended against such a statutory allocation but recognized the need for extending broadcasting to education. It expressed its intention "actively to assist the determination of the rightful place of broadcasting in education and to see that it is used in that place."

FM Educational Stations—When regular FM broadcasting was authorized in 1941, five channels were authorized for noncommercial educational use as a substitution for AM allocations previously made to education.

In 1945, as part of an extensive revision of frequency allocations, the commission reserved 20 FM channels between 88 and 92 mhz for noncommercial educational FM stations. This part of the FM band is contiguous to the commercial portion, and FM receivers can tune both noncommercial and commercial stations. Since then, the number of noncommercial educational FM stations has grown slowly but steadily.

In 1948, the commission authorized 10 watt operation on educational FM channels. With such low-power equipment, easily installed and operated, schools may broadcast to a limited area of two to five miles for an outlay of a few thousand dollars. High-power equipment may be added when desired. In 1951, as a further aid, the commission authorized remote control operation of low-power educational stations. Approximately half of all educational FM stations use power of 10 watts.

Educational FM stations traditionally have been assigned on an individual-application "demand" basis, as AM stations are assigned. To permit planned development of the 20 reserved channels, it is proposed to adopt a table of assignments like that adopted in 1963 for commercial FM channels to allocate specific frequencies to communities.

Stations in the educational FM service are licensed principally to school systems, colleges and universities for student-teacher programs as well as for public education and information.

TV Educational Stations—The commission allocated TV facilities for noncommercial educational use after a lengthy study in the general television proceedings (see Broadcast). It determined that "the need for noncommercial educational stations has been amply demonstrated," that it would take longer for the educational service to be developed than for the commercial service, and that special channels should be reserved. Consequently, in 1952, channel assignments were made to 242 communities exclusively for noncommercial educational stations. Forty-six of these were made to primary educational centers. Of the total 242 channels, 80 were VHF and 162 UHF. There have been more assignments since. In 1966, a revised table of channel assignments was adopted for UHF, containing many more educational assignments than before. The new table contains altogether over 615 educational TV assignments in the mainland states, more than a third of all channel assignments.

The first educational TV station to go on the air was KUHT Houston on May 25, 1953. The first state educational TV network was established in Alabama on April 28, 1955.

A 1962 law enabled the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to make matching federal grants of money to build educational TV stations, and a 1967 law extended these benefits to educational radio.

Public broadcasting in its present form emerged with the passage of the Public Broadcasting Act of 1967. That act authorized the establishment of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, whose primary function is to funnel federal funds to qualified noncommercial licensees. National Public Radio was established in 1971 to provide interconnection and programming service for public radio stations. The Public Broadcasting Service started operating in 1970. PBS provides interconnection and distributes programming to public television stations.

Cable Television

Cable TV got its start as CATV (community antenna television) in the late 1940's when entrepreneurs seized upon it as a method for boosting television receiver sales in areas that were underserved or unserved by standard broadcast stations. According to legend, one backwoods Pennsylvania appliance dealer rigged a large antenna on a mountaintop, then connected it to homes in the area with a network of wires. The gentleman's system reportedly did stimulate receiver sales, and his idea caught on.

After it was discovered that CATV could present consumers with better reception and could, via microwave relay stations, be used to import television signals from distant television stations, CATV systems began sprouting up in areas that already were served by local broadcast stations.

During the 1960's, equipment was developed that increased the capacity of CATV systems to 20 channels. Further advancements in the early 1970's permitted the transmission of more than 100 channels over dual-cable systems.

Attempts to wire the major urban areas in the early 1970's largely fell flat, with major companies discovering that laying coaxial cable in cities was far more expensive than they thought and that there wasn't an overwhelming demand for CATV in those areas, which were already well served by standard broadcast stations.

Demand for cable increased dramatically, however, in the mid-1970's when Time Inc.'s Home Box Office began distributing its pay TV service via satellite. Other entrepreneurs followed HBO's lead, distributing programming of their own, via satellite, and cable started looking far more attractive to consumers in suburban and urban areas. By the early 1980's, most cities were either wired or franchising battles were being fought for the right to wire them.

The FCC started regulating cable TV in April 1965, adopting rules for CATV systems served by microwave. The commission required CATV operators to carry the signals of local stations and to refrain from duplicating the programs of local stations (by carrying other stations broadcasting the same programs) within 15 days of the local broadcast.

In 1966, the commission required all cable TV systems to carry local and nearby stations (the must-carry rules), and to protect their programs from duplications. Nonetheless, the 15-day protection requirement was repealed, and cable operators were required to provide that protection only on the day of the broadcast. In 1969, the broadcast requirements of fairness and sponsor identification were extended to cable.

In 1972, the FCC began deregulating cable, dropping most of its cable regulations over the next 10 years. In 1980, the FCC eliminated its distant-signal and syndicated exclusivity rules, and the Court of Appeals in New York upheld that decision the following year. In July 1985, The Court of Appeals in Washington repealed the must-carry rules. In August 1986, the FCC issued new rules which are much less burdensome on cable operators, but they too failed to pass judicial muster.

In 1984, Congress essentially deregulated cable with its passage of the Cable Communications Policy Act of 1984. But ever since then, pressure has mounted for a new law to regulate cable rates and services. No such law was passed in 1991, but it's possible one could be sent to the President's desk in 1992.

Related Technologies

Satellites—In presenting programmers and common carriers with a relatively inexpensive alternative for transmitting their services nationally, satellites have probably done more to speed the communications revolution than any other technology.

A satellite, in essence, is a radio relay station in the sky, one that receives transmissions from the earth, then retransmits them back to receiving stations on the ground. The satellite's actual transmitter/receivers are called transponders; they are generally able to relay a single color TV channel (or 1,000 telephone conversations) at any one time, but methods for increasing that capacity are being developed. Most communications satellites have either 16 or 24 transponders.

Communications satellites are launched into positions 22,300 miles above the equator, where they orbit the earth at the same rate the earth is rotating, which makes them appear to be stationary and permits the use of fixed earth stations.

The first live trans-Atlantic telecast was relayed by Telstar I on July 10, 1962. That same year's Communications Satellite Act provided for the U.S. portion of a global satellite system that would be operated by the Communications Satellite Corp., a private corporation subject to federal regulation.

Intelsat I on April 2, 1965, became the first commercial satellite to be put into orbit with its foreign partners in the International Telecommunications Satellite Consortium. During the following year, some 80 hours of television were transmitted between the U.S. and Europe.

The real rush for satellite video transmission didn't begin until after 1975, when Time Inc.'s Home Box Office began transmitting its pay-TV programming over RCA's Satcom I to cable systems scattered across the country. Over the past 10 years, scores of companies have followed HBO's lead. By late last year, most of the transponders on three satellites were dedicated to the distribution of cable programming.

Cable programmers aren't alone in realizing the benefits of satellite distribution. The Public Broadcasting Service started transmitting programming via satellite to its noncommercial affiliates in 1978, and in the mid-1980s the major commercial networks have switched to satellites for the distribution of their programming as well.

Although the FCC has traditionally regulated domestic satellites as common carriers, it has been loosening its grasp. In 1982, the commission permitted some operators to sell transponders on their satellites (they previously have had to lease those on a first-come, first-served basis, at rates approved by the FCC). The commision decided to reduce orbital spacing between satellites to two degrees. This move will be phased in over several years and will permit more satellites to be launched.

Subscription television (STV)—The major difference between STV and conventional TV is that you have to pay for the former.

STV stations are standard VHF or UHF television stations that scramble their signals. The STV operater then charges customers a fee for a decoder to decipher the scrambled signals.

Authorized in December 1968, STV did not really get off the ground until the late 1970's. It grew rapidly for a few years, and counted about 1.4 million subscribers in the summer of 1982. But it's been in a steep decline ever since, the victim of piracy and stiff competition from cable systems offering more channels for less money. Today, there are only a few stations, some of them low-power (see below), still offering an STV service.

Low-power television (LPTV)—LPTV stations are essentially television translator stations (stations that have traditionally been limited to rebroadcasting the signals of full-service stations) that are permitted to originate programming.

In authorizing the service in 1982, the FCC estimated that as many as 4,000 new stations would be spawned by the rules, adding to the more than 4,000 existing translators that can rise to LPTV status simply by notifying the FCC. However, the new medium has gotten off to a slow start, raising doubts about whether it will ever meet the FCC's original expectations.

Under the rules, LPTV stations were given "secondary status," which essentially means they cannot interfere with full-power stations. They were also limited to 10 watts VHF and 1,000 watts UHF.

The new stations have few regulatory obligations, and there are no crossownership or multiple-ownership restrictions. However, the stations must observe statutory prohibitions against broadcast of obscenities and lotteries; however, they only have limited equal time and fairness doctrine obligations.

Wireless Cable—More than an oxymoron, wireless cable is a pay television service that delivers multiple cable programming services to subscribers via omnidirectional microwave (2 ghz) broadcasts. To receive the broadcast, subscribers are equipped with special antennas and tuners.

According to the Wireless Cable Association, some tk systems served more than 300,000 subscribers in the U.S. in 1991.

Wireless cable operators use a combination of 2 ghz channels licensed to three different services: the multipoint distribution service (MDS), the Instructional Television Fixed Service (ITFS), and the Operational Fixed Service (OFS). There are 31 such channels available in each market.

MDS is a common carrier service. Wireless cable operators may own and program certain MDS channels, or lease the capacity from others. ITFS is a broadcasting service, intended primarily for nonprofit groups interested in broadcasting instructional programming. The FCC permits ITFS licensees to lease a portion of each of their channels to wireless cable operators as long as a "substantial portion" is retained for its intended educational purpose. OFS is regulated by the FCC's Private Radio Bureau.

Direct Broadcast Satellites (DBS)—This new generation of high-power satellites was authorized in the summer of 1982, opening the way for widespread, direct-to-home satellite broadcasting. However, the enormous financial risks involved in building the satellite and launching a national DBS service have cast doubt on whether the satellite broadcasting service will ever materialize in the United States.

DBS satellites work the same way cable satellites do: they receive signals from earth, then retransmit them back to the ground. But since they operate with higher power, their signals can be received with much smaller, and therefore much more affordable, earth stations.

The FCC created the high-power DBS service in June 1982, allocating 500 mhz (12.2-12.7 ghz) and granting construction permits to eight applicants.

In setting the high-power DBS rules, FCC gave broad leeway to the applicants to determine what sorts of services they want to offer and how they want to be regulated. DBS operators opting to offer broadcast services will be subject to broadcast rules; operators offering common carrier-like services will be subject to common carrier rules. The FCC declined to impose any ownership restrictions, and imposed no technical standards on the service beyond those required by international agreements, which were worked out at an international conference in Geneva in the summer of 1983.

With the exception of Hubbard Broadcasting's United States Satellite Broadcasting, none of the original eight applicants was still attempting to launch a service after a few years. Comsat's Satellite Television Corp. was the most notable failure. It dropped its plans in November 1984 after five and a half years and $140 million.

In 1988, the FCC granted channels to a new round of eight applicants, including Hubbard and Hughes Communications. Following a failed attempt in 1990 to form a DBS co-venture with NBC, Cablevision Systems and Rupert Murdoch's News Corp., Hughes sold five of 16 satellite transponders on a planned direct broadcast satellite to Hubbard, to be launched in late 1993 or early 1994.

Hughes is seeking additional partners, investors or programmers. The FCC has also reserved channels for Tempo Satellite, which is controlled by Tele-Communications Inc., the nations largest cable operator.

Seeking to exploit the same market as DBS, several ventures have offered quasi-DBS service via conventional medium-power fixed satellites, which can beam pictures to three- or four-foot dishes.

United Satellite Communications Inc. launched such a service in November 1983, but it failed within a year when it ran out of money and couldn't raise any more.

A consortium of cable operators led by TCI introduced a medium power service in fall 1990. It entered 1991 with sound backing, but limited ambitions. The service comprises a few pay-per-view movie channels and several broadcast television signals. Many see it as primarily a defensive move by the operators, designed to preempt any high power DBS efforts.

Skypix Corp., with financing from Mitsubishi, plans to launch an 80-channel, medium-power, pay-per-view service in 1992.

The proliferation of backyard earth stations to receive all sorts of programming relayed over satellites has given rise to low-power satellite broadcasting as cable programmers have scrambled their feeds and begun charging dish owners to receive it. Home satellite industry estimates that there were more than three million homes with dishes in 1990.

Satellite Master Antenna Systems (SMATV)—SMATV systems, cloned from cable systems, look like cable systems, and, in most cases, are operated like them. The essential difference is that SMATV systems operate on private property—apartment buildings, condominium complexes or private housing developments and mobile home parks. Instead of getting a franchise (the right to string or bury wire along city streets and rights of way) from local governments, SMATV operators sign contracts with property owners, allowing them to bring cable television into the homes on the property.

In most cases, that's done by hooking up an earth station that's aimed at a cable satellite to a multi-unit building's master antenna system. In other cases, it also sometimes involves wiring buildings with nonexistent or inadequate master antenna systems and interconnecting two or more buildings of a single complex with overhead or underground cable. One advantage SMATV operators have over their cable counterparts is that they are free from regulation. Because they don't need a municipal franchise, they aren't burdened with the local regulations that go along with those. Since SMATV operators are generally excluded from the FCC's definition of a cable system, they are also exempt from federal regulation.

High-definition television (HDTV)—The term "HDTV" is used to describe the series of video production, transmission and display technologies providing television with wider screens than the current National Television Systems Committee system (16:9 compared to the current 4:3), at least twice the NSTC's resolution, vastly improved color fidelity and compact disk-quality digital audio.

The most widely known HDTV video production system was developed by the Japanese Broadcast Corp. (NHK). First demonstrated in the U.S. in 1982, the NHK system records video with 1,125 scanning lines of information at a field rate of 60 hertz. NHK was also the first to demonstrate HDTV in terrestrial and satellite transmission with its MUSE (multiple sub-Nyquist encoding) system.

Transmission of HDTV is currently an issue before the FCC. In 1987, the commission established an industry advisory committee on advanced television service to recommend a transmission system for standardization. That recommendation is expected by September 1992 with final FCC approval expected in spring 1993. If all goes according to plan, the FCC will then set aside second channels for TV stations so they may begin HDTV simulcastng.

Testing on six proposed transmission systems began in July 1991 at the Advanced Television Test Center, a research lab established by the broadcasting industry in Alexandria, Va. Completion of testing is expected in August 1992.

Four of the six systems scheduled for testing are all-digital, simulcast systems. Three research consortia are developing the systems, made up of 1) General Instrument Corp. and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology; 2) Zenith Corp. and AT&T; and 3) NBC, North American Philips, Thomson Consumer Electronics and the David Sarnoff Research Center. The General Instrument-MIT consortium is proposing two all-digital systems.

The other two proposals are an analog simulcast system, NHK's Narrow-MUSE, and the Sarnoff Center's ACTV, an enhanced-definition, receiver compatible system.

Auxillary Broadcast Services—Broadcasters take portable or mobile transmitters to the scene of events to relay aural programs back to the station for on-the-spot coverage of sporting events, parades, conventions, fairs, disasters and other newsworthy events. These remote-broadcast pickup stations use frequencies in the 26, 153 and 450 mhz portions of the spectrum.

TV stations also use small portable transmitters operating in the 2, 7 and 13 ghz-per-second (microwave) portions of the spectrum for visual coverage of out-of-studio events.

Other Broadcast Activity

International Broadcast—Under international agreement, certain high-frequency bands are allocated for broadcast between nations.

Authorizations for non-government international broadcast stations in the United States are issued by the FCC. Only a handful of these international stations are now authorized. A single station uses a number of frequencies between 5950 and 26100 khz, and it may need more than one transmitter because of seasonal considerations and other factors in broadcasting different programs simultaneously to different parts of the world. The minimum power for these stations, sometimes known as short-wave stations, is 50 kw.

During World War II, international broadcast stations in the United States were taken over temporarily by the Office of War Information and the Office of Inter-American Affairs of the Department of State, which programmed them in the interest of the war effort.

Under the peacetime program of the Department of State, the United States Information Agency broadcasts daily in many languages to other parts of the world through the Voice of America. VOA stations are not licensed or regulated by the FCC. There are about 30

VOA transmitters in the United States and about 70 located in foreign countries.

VOA is not the U.S.'s only foreign broadcast service. Radio Liberty and Radio Free Europe, funded by Congress and supervised by the Board of International Broadcasting, serve as surrogate stations for the countries to which they broadcast—the USSR, in the case of RL, and other countries of the Eastern bloc in the case of RFE. Radio Marti, a VOA service, has been serving as a surrogate station for Cuba since 1985.

Year in Review: Broadcasting and Cable 1991

Broadcasting

There were 11,024 radio stations operating in the United States at the end of 1991. Of these, 4,988 were commercial AM stations, 4,539 were commercial FMs and 1,497 were noncommercial FMs. There were 1,488 operating television stations: 556 commercial VHFs, 575 commercial UHFs, 124 noncommercial VHFs and 233 noncommercial UHFs. Most commercial TVs are network affiliated; approximately 429 operate as independents.

No single entity may own more than 12 stations in each service (AM, FM or TV). In TV, the entity is permitted to own 12 TV stations as long as they don't reach more than 25% of the nation's television homes. UHF's are assessed for only half of a market's television homes. Group broadcasters who buy interests in stations more than half owned by minorities are able to own up to 14 stations in a service, and are able to reach 30% of the nation's television households through their TV's, as long as two of the stations in each service are controlled by minorities.

Newspaper owners may no longer purchase broadcast properties in the same market, nor may radio station owners acquire TV stations there, nor TV owners acquire radio outlets. TV stations may no longer acquire cable TV franchises in the same city, and networks may not own cable systems at all.

In 1990, according to estimates by the Television Bureau of Advertising and the Radio Advertising Bureau, commercial broadcasting had total advertising revenues of approximately $35.4 billion. Television advertising accounted for $26.6 billion (75.1%) of revenues; radio advertising, for approximately $8.8 billion (24.9%). Public broadcasting had a 1990 income of $1.6 billion—16.7% from the federal government.

In 1990 television billings for stations and networks amounted to $9.4 billion (national network), $7.8 billion (national non-network), $7.8 billion (local), and $1.6 billion (national syndication), according to estimates by the Television Bureau of Advertising. The Radio Advertising Bureau estimated radio billings for stations and networks were $433,000,000 (national network), $1,626,000,000 (national non-network), and $6,780,000,000 (local).

There are more than 92 million U.S. homes (98% of all homes) with television sets, about 65% of which have more than one set. About 91 million homes have color. It is estimated that about 78.2% of TV homes are equipped with a VCR, and that about 63.8% are linked with cable systems, according to Arbitron Television. There are an estimated 558 million radio sets in the U.S., 356 million (64%) of them in homes and 202 million (36%) out of homes.

The average American home watches TV for six hours and 56 minutes a day, according to Nielsen Media Research statistics for the 1990-1991 season. And the latest study by The Roper Organization (commissioned by the National Association of Broadcasters and the Network Television Association) shows that 69% of the U.S. public turns to TV as the source of most of its news, and that 54% ranks it as the most believable news source.

The average 30-second prime-time network television announcement now costs $100,000 (spots on a top-rated series cost $200,000; low-rated spots average about $50,000). An estimated 118 million people watched the 1992 Super Bowl telecast. Thirty-second announcements during that event cost $800,000. Thirty-second announcements on individual TV stations range from $20,000 in top-rated specials in major markets to as low as $10 in the second-hundred markets. Radio spots cost from $1,000 or more in major markets to less than a dollar in small towns.

Cable

There are 11,314 operating cable systems in the U.S., serving some 30,579 communities. Another 100 franchises are approved but not built. Texas has the most systems (640) and California the most subscribers (6 million). Operating systems currently reach about 56 million subscribers, perhaps over 147 million people—60.3% of the nation's TV households. The largest (Cablevision Systems in Oyster Bay, N.Y.) has over 500,000 subscribers. Some have fewer than 100. Tele-Communications Inc. is the largest multiple system operator (MSO), with more than 8,400,000 subscribers. Industry revenues last year totaled approximately $18 billion. Most systems offer 30 or more channels. Systems constructed after March 1972 must have a minimum 20-channel capacity. The average monthly fee (basic service) is $18. Costs of laying cable range from $10,000 per mile in rural areas to $100,000 in urban areas and up to $300,000 where underground cable is required. An estimated 5,500 systems originate programing in their own studios; the average is 23 hours weekly. Equipment costs are as low as $30,000 for a small black-and-white operation and $200,000 for a color studio.

Over 2,370 systems (21% of all systems) accept advertising on their local origination channels (excluding automated channels), with rates from $2 to $600 per 30-second spot. Most cable systems derive less than 5% of their gross revenues from advertising. Pay cable is on approximately 9,000 systems and reaches 51 million subscribers in 50 states. Most pay cable operators are reporting close to 79% penetration of their subscriber count. Home Box Office Inc. initiated the first national satellite interconnected pay network Sept. 30, 1975, using transponder time leased on the Satcom satellite. Aside from contracting for packaged pay programs, like HBO, cable operators can lease a channel to a pay program operator or secure their own programing directly from a supplier. Many systems have multiple cross-ownership ties.

Guglielmo Marconi sends and receives his first wireless signals across his father's estate at Bologna, Italy.

March 27, 1899:
Marconi flashes the first wireless signals across the English Channel.

December 12, 1901:
Marconi at Newfoundland intercepts the first transatlantic signal, the letter "S", transmitted from Poldhu, England.

1906:
Dr. Lee De Forest invents the audion, a three-element vacuum tube, having a filament, plate and grid.

January 13, 1910:
Enrico Caruso and Emmy Destinn, singing backstage at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, broadcast through De Forest radiophone and are heard by operators on S.S. Avon at sea and by wireless amateurs in Connecticut.

June 24, 1910:
United States approves an act requiring certain passenger ships to carry wireless equipment and operators.

April 14, 1912:
S.S. Titanic disaster proves the value of wireless at sea; 705 lives saved. Jack Phillips and Harold Bride are the wireless men. David Sarnoff, at Marconi wireless station on Wanamaker Building in New York, receives signals.

August 20, 1920:
WWJ (AM) Detroit, owned by Detroit News, starts what is later claimed to be regular broadcasting.

November 2, 1920:
KDKA (AM) Pittsburgh (Westinghouse Co.) sends out the Harding-Cox election returns, starting what is claimed to be first regularly scheduled broadcasting.

July 2, 1921:
Dempsey-Carpentier fight is broadcast from Boyle's Thirty Acres in Jersey City through a temporarily installed transmitter at Hoboken, N.J. Major J. Andrew White is the announcer. This event gives radio a tremendous boost.

1922:
The superheterodyne as a broadcast receiver is demonstrated by its inventor, Edwin H. Armstrong.

September 7, 1922:
WEAF (AM) New York broadcasts the first commercially sponsored program of the Queensborough Corp., a real estate organization.

January 4, 1923 :
A "chain" broadcast features a telephone tieup between WEAF New York and WNAC Boston.

1924:
Republican convention at Cleveland and Democratic convention at New York are broadcast over networks.

1925:
Coolidge inaugural broadcast by 24 stations in transcontinental network.

February 23, 1926:
President Coolidge signs the Dill-White Radio Bill creating the Federal Radio Commission and ending chaos caused by wild growth of broadcasting.

November 1, 1926:
National Broadcasting Company organized, with WEAF and WJZ as key stations and Merlin Hall Aylesworth as president. Headquarters established at 711 Fifth Avenue, New York.

September 18, 1927:
Columbia Broadcasting System goes on the air with a basic network of 16 stations. Major J. Andrew White is president.

January 3, 1929:
William S. Paley elected president of Columbia Broadcasting System.

November 18, 1929:
Dr. V.K. Zworykin demonstrates his kinescope or cathode-ray television receiver before a meeting of the Institute of Radio Engineers.

July 30, 1930:
Experimental television transmitter W2XAB is opened by National Broadcasting Co. in New York.

1931

July 21:
Experimental television station W2XAB is opened by Columbia Broadcasting System in New York.

October 15:
First issue of Broadcasting magazine appears. "Broadcasting in the United States today stands in grave jeopardy. Politically powerful and efficiently organized groups, actuated by a selfishness and with a mania for power, are now busily at work plotting the complete destruction of the industry we have pioneered and developed," Walter J. Damm, president, National Association of Broadcasters, in his message to 1931 annual NAB convention. Federal Radio Commission grants full power (50 kw) to nine stations, making total of 23 outlets now authorized for full power operation out of 40 clear-channel stations.

November 1:
Harry Shaw, WMT(AM) Waterloo, Iowa, is elected NAB president for ensuing year.

U.S. and Canadian stations complain of interference from high-power Mexican border stations, Mexico not being party to "gentlemen's agreement" between Canada and U.S. for non-conflicting frequency assignments.

NBC forms two Pacific Coast networks—Orange, comprising KGO(AM) Oakland, KFI(AM) Los Angeles, KGW(AM) Portland, KOMO(AM) Seattle, KHZ(AM) Spokane, and Gold, with KPO(AM) San Francisco, KECA(AM) Los Angeles, KEX(AM) Portland, KJR(AM) Seattle and KGA(AM) Spokane.

Pursuant to zone and state quota system of station allocations ordered by Davis amendment to the Federal Radio Act of 1927, FRC orders WIBO(AM) and WPCC(AM) Chicago off the air and assigns 560 kc, on which they share time, to WJKS(AM) Gary, Ind. (This became benchmark law in later court appeal. See report for May 15, 1933).

December 1:
Two of every five U.S. households owned radios on April 1, 1930, U.S. Census Bureau reports: 12,078,345 radio families out of total 29,980,146 U.S. families.

December 15:
FRC revises rules to require station-break announcements only every 30 minutes and to permit identification of reproduced music in any "clear" language.

Also provides for granting applications without hearings.

Chicago stations, meeting with Better Business Bureau, agree to drop exaggerated and misleading advertising, to abide by NAB standards of practice. More than half of nation's stations are operating without profit, NAB President Harry Shaw tells FRC.

January 1:
James C. Petrillo, president, Chicago local, American Federation of Musicians, calls strike against city's radio stations for midnight New Year's Eve. Educational stations devote only 8% of their air time to educational programs, compared to 10% average for commercial stations, FRC records show.

January 15:
Senate adopts resolution ordering FRC to investigate radio advertising, study feasibility of government operation of broadcasting along European lines. Refusing to bow to Petrillo's demands, Chicago broadcasters stand firm, avert strike, win new contract on own terms.

February 1:
FRC adopts order requiring all applications for station licenses to include sworn statements of transfer terms, designed to stop "trafficking in wave lengths and licenses."

February 15:
Senate launches study to find why State Department has not negotiated with Mexico and Cuba to protect radio channels used by U.S. broadcasters. BBDO survey finds over 75 regular weekly transcribed programs on air for national advertisers, 175% increase in two years.

Gross incomes of CBS and NBC in 1931 totaled $35,791,000, gain of 33.6% over 1930.

March 1:
House Committee on Patents begins investigation of American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers and what committee Chairman William I. Sirovitch (D-N.Y.) termed its "racketeering" activities. New copyright legislation designed to protect broadcasters and other users of music is planned.

March 15:
CBS, NBC and New York area stations, notably WOR(AM), go into round-the-clock operations to cover Lindbergh kidnapping, radio's biggest spot-news reporting job to date.

Samuel Clyde, director of advertising, General Mills, urges that broadcasting stations operate on standard time year round as railroads do, eliminating semiannual time change switch he called "the one big drawback" in radio advertising.

William S. Paley, CBS president, and associates buy half interest in network held by Paramount-Publix Corp., giving them complete ownership of network. Lehn & Fink, in daring experiment, puts complete 1932 advertising budget of Pebeco toothpaste into radio.

KNX(AM) Hollywood signs three-year contract with United Press for wire service for four broadcasts each day plus "extras."

April 1:
WFLA(AM)—WSUN(AM) Clearwater, FL, installs country's first directional antenna, designed by Raymond Wilmotte, "British authority on transmitting aerials."

April 15:
ASCAP boosts copyright fees to broadcasters by 300%, to 5% of gross income, totaling some $3.5 million annually, compared with $960,000 for 1931.

May 1:
NBC lifts ban on recorded programs for its owned and operated stations, leaving it up to judgment of station managers, but still barring them from network use.

Rejecting ASCAP's demands, NAB sets up committee to negotiate better deal with copyright owners, secures moratorium until Sept. 1.

June 15:
Federal Radio Commission, after six-month investigation of broadcasting, particularly its advertising activities, reports to Congress that "any plan... to eliminate the use of radio facilities for commercial advertising purposes, will, if adopted, destroy the present system of broadcasting."

Advertising agencies, also queried, say that any law limiting advertising on air to announcement of sponsorship would cause most advertisers to cease their use of radio.

July 1:
State Supreme Court of Nebraska, in suit of Attorney General C.A. Sorensen against KFAB (AM) Lincoln and Richard A. Wood for allegedly libelous remarks made by Wood over KFAB during election campaign, rules that broadcasting station is equally liable with speaker for libelous statements disseminated through its facilities.

July 15:
To broadcast 58 hours of sessions of two national political conventions from Chicago Stadium, NBC canceled 56 commercials, CBS canceled more than a dozen.

NBC withdraws prohibition against price mentions on air during daytime hours; A&P is first advertiser to take advantage.

August 1:
ASCAP breaks off negotiations with NAB; prepares to start negotiations with individual stations; offers three-year contracts at 3% of net income for first year, 4% for second and 5% for third, plus annual sustaining program fees. Broadcasting survey of free advertising propositions currently flooding radio station mail reveals national magazines as most persistent in demands for free time on air.

August 15:
Republicans allot $300,000 for radio time for presidential campaign, two-thirds for network time, one-third for spot.

September 1:
NAB resumes negotiations with ASCAP, submits to demands for progressive percentage-of-income fees for music used on commercial shows, plus flat sustaining payment.

September 15:
CBS and NBC permit price mentions, night as well as day; again, A&P is first advertiser to broadcast prices at night.

October 15:
Mexican government authorizes XER(AM), across border from Del Rio, Tex., to broadcast with 50 kw; NAB files protest with State Department asking protection from interference for U.S. broadcasters.

ASCAP offers special reduced fees to newspaper-owned stations in recognition of "substantial contributions to the promotion..of music made by newspapers.

To protect broadcasters from dangers inherent in Nebraska Supreme Court ruling on radio libel, John W. Guilder, acting chairman of committee on communications, American Bar Association, advocates rule freeing station from liability "whenever it appears that the management of the station exercised due and reasonable care to avoid the utterance of defamation."

November 1:
Chrysler Corp. introduces 1933 Plymouth Six to 75,000 salesmen via 25-city CBS hookup; insures this radio business conference for $500,000 against line break or equipment failure.

Interstate Commerce Commission, dismissing complaint of Sta-Shine Co. against NBC and WGBB (AM) Freeport, New York, rules that broadcasting stations are not public utilities and that ICC therefore has no power to regulate their advertising rates.

December 1:
NAB St. Louis convention elects as president Alfred J. McCosker, director, WOR(AM) Newark, NJ; plans program of aggressive opposition to exhorbitant copyright fees and line charges, spearheaded by prominent public figure and supported by war chest three or four times as big as present annual income of $50,000; agrees on self-regulation as best preventive of governmental interference in broadcasting.

Accepting government consent decree, General Electric and Westinghouse agree to divest themselves of their stock control of RCA, which becomes completely independent company; patent pool becomes nonexclusive, but RCA retains licensing rights to patents of GE and Westinghouse as well as its own.

January 1:
Frederic R. Gamble, American Association of Advertising Agencies executive secretary, urges closer cooperation between agencies and broadcasters, advocates cash discount for bills paid promptly by agencies.

January 15:
Phonograph companies start labeling records "not licensed for radio broadcast "as move to protect their alleged property rights; Oswald F. Schuette, director of NAB copyright activities, calls move "a bluff" with no legal basis.

February 1:
NAB retains Newton D. Baker, Cleveland attorney who was Secretary of War during Wilson administration, as special counsel.

Foods, drugs and toiletries, and tobaccos were most-advertised products on radio networks (CBS and NBC) in 1932, when combined gross time sales totaled $39,106,776.

March 1:
NAB commercial committee and AAAA radio committee agree on standard form for agency orders of radio time.

Attempted assassination of President-elect Roosevelt gets prompt radio coverage; CBS puts eyewitnesses on air within 90 minutes via special line instead of taking time to have link with Miami reversed.

KOIL(AM) Omaha, creates business at depth of Depression by selling time to associations of barbers, beauticians, florists, grocers, druggists and other trade groups whose members buy collectively what they can't afford individually.

March 15:
Radio places full facilities at disposal of Roosevelt administration during banking crisis; largest audience in history reported for President Roosevelt's CBS-NBC broadcast on plans to reopen nation's banks.

Canadian Radio commission acquires its first three stations, CNRA(AM) Moncton, N.B.; CNRO(AM) Ottawa, Ont., and CNRV(AM); Vancouver, B.C., formerly owned by Canadian National Railways.

April 1:
Post office modifies rules so stations can forward fan mail to sponsors in bulk without paying additional first class fees.

NBC discontinues its Pacific Coast Gold Network to save line costs; Orange network continues, absorbing some Gold programs.

Southern California broadcasters carry on amid wreckage to keep nation informed of effects of earthquake.

April 15:
NAB organizes Radio Program Foundation to make available for broadcasting copyrighted works of non-ASCAP composers and publishers.

Federal District Court in Sioux Falls, S.D., grants Associated Press permanent injunction against unauthorized broadcasting of AP news by KSOO (AM) Sioux Falls.

May 1:
AP membership votes to ban network broadcasts of AP news and to curtail local broadcasts to bulletins at stipulated times with air credit to member newspaper, which is to pay extra broadcast assessment.

American Newspaper Publishers Association annual meeting resolves that radio logs are advertising and should be published only if paid for.

May 15:
Federal Radio Commission is granted absolute power in distributing radio facilities by Supreme Court ruling upholding commission's decision to delete WIBO(AM) and WPCC(AM) Chicago (over quota by current allocation plan) and give 560 kc regional channel to WJKS(AM) Gary, Ind.

News on air is undiminished as United Press and International News Service fail to follow AP's example; networks establish own correspondents in key cities; President again uses combined CBS-NBC networks for second "fireside chat," phrase coined by Harry Butcher, CBS Washington.

July 1:
NAB-sponsored Radio Program Foundation acquires broadcast rights to Ricordi catalogue of 123,000 compositions; offers package to member stations at rates of $2.50 to $25 monthly.

George B. Storer, president, CKLW(AM) Detroit-Windsor, heads Point-O- Purchase Broadcasting System, which plans to install radio receivers in grocery and drug stores to receive programs broadcast by Point-O-Purchase during peak shopping hours and so provide "the missing link between manufacturer and consumer."

August 1:
National Recovery Administration program involves broadcasters in two ways: (1) As employers and as operators of medium which can publicize program. (2) NAB sends questionnaire to all broadcasters on employment practices, appoints advisory committee to work with William B. Dolph, former RCA Photophone salesman, now in charge of radio publicity for NRA.

August 15:
First North American Radio Conference breaks up when Mexico refuses to budge from demands for 12 clear channels; interference problems foreseen as Latin American countries, not bound by any international agreements, are free to use whatever frequencies they desire.

September 1:
Rate cutting, per-inquiry business, song plugging, excessive coverage claims, excessive commission payments, lotteries and similar practices are barred by broadcasting code drafted by NAB committee and submitted to NRA; Sol A. Rosenblatt is named code administrator.

New York business group headed by Alfred E. Smith acquires commercial and program rights of WMCA(AM) New York in $155,000-a-year deal whose legality is questioned by Federal Radio Commission.

September 15:
NAB special counsel, Newton D. Baker, files suit in federal court asking dissolution of ASCAP as illegal trade combination. CBS assigns publicity director, Paul White, to task of organizing nationwide staff to collect news for network broadcast.

October 1:
General Mills sponsors twice-daily broadcasts on CBS of news collected by Columbia News Service; Washington Star drops program log of WJSV(AM) (CBS outlet serving Washington) in line with policy of "not advertising our competitors."

After many delays, Ed Wynn's Amalgamated Broadcasting System gets under way as third national network with 100 outlets, connected by Western Union lines. (see Nov. 15 item).

Stations file for 50 kw power as FRC lifts limit from four to eight per zone, or from 20 to 40 for U.S.

NBC moves into Radio City headquarters, world's largest broadcasting plant.

October 15:
NAB convention re-elects Alfred J. McCosker, WOR(AM) Newark, NJ, for second year as president; urges abolition of requirement that recorded programs be so identified; urges three-year licenses in place of current six-month ones; agrees to intensify fight against ASCAP; denounces concealed commercials in sustaining programs and contingency accounts as unfair practices.

Yankee Network adds rider to political contracts absolving network from liability for libel or defamation by speakers.

November 15:
Repeal of Prohibition Act raises question of advertising hard liquor on radio; CBS and some stations announce they will not accept it at all.

Other groups ponder "third network" organizations as Ed Wynn's Amalgamated Broadcasting System goes bankrupt.

WGN (AM) Chicago, WBZ (AM) Boston and WHAM (AM) Rochester, NY, are first to get 50 kw under revised regulation.

December 1:
President signs broadcasting code, calling for minimum wages of $40 per week for technicians, $20 per week for announcers and program production employees ($15 if fewer than 10 such employed at station).

Washington newspapers agree to publish radio logs only as paid advertising.

January 1:
Broadcast band widened to include three new channels—1530, 1550 and 1570 kc -with 20 kc separation, for experimental operation (but with full authority to broadcast commercial programs) with goal of high-fidelity broadcast transmission.

January 15:
WLW Cincinnati starts tests of new 500 kw transmitter, world's most powerful.

Group programming, a station-built half hour show sold to six sponsors instead of one, developed at WTMJ Milwaukee to stimulate sales during Depression, proves successful for both station and sponsors.

February 1:
NRA Code Authority for broadcasting outlaws per-inquiry and contingent business, launches study of status of performers to determine whether they should be covered by code's wage-and-hour provisions.

Students remember advertising they hear better than that they read in test conducted by Professor Frank Stanton of Ohio State University's psychology department.

February 15:
CBS and NBC withdraw from newsgathering field as AP, UP and INS agree to provide material for morning and evening network newscasts.

Milwaukee Journal's WTMJ(AM) prepares for experimental facsimile broadcasting.

March 1:
Press Radio Bureau begins operations; Yankee Network and KFI (AM) Los Angeles set up own news organizations with exchange of news contemplated.

March 15:
George B. Storer, chief owner of CKLW(AM) Detroit-Windsor, WSPD(AM) Toledo, Ohio and WWVA(AM) Wheeling, W.VA, becomes president and majority stockholder of Federal Broadcasting Corp., lessee-operator of WMCA(AM) New York, designated as key station for projected nationwide network.

April 1:
Three independent news services organize to provide news to radio stations.

May 1:
Federal Trade Commission announces that after June 1 it will periodically ask stations, networks, transcription companies for copies of all commercial copy as part of overall survey of advertising.

June 15:
Communications Act now law; Federal Communications Commission to replace Federal Radio Commission July 1.

July 1:
E.O. Sykes, charter member of Federal Radio Commission, is named chairman of new FCC. Other members are: Thad H. Brown, also holdover from FRC, Paul A. Walker, Norman S. Case, Irvin Stewart, George Henry Payne and Hampson Gary. George B. Storer announces new network, American Broadcasting System, will begin operations in mid-August; hires Frederick H. Weber, former Chicago manager of NBC station relations, as operations vice president.

July 15:
Clear-channel stations attack "break down" policy of old radio commission; urge FCC to conduct engineering study of subject preliminary to restatement of regulations.

August 1:
FCC forms three-man broadcasting division, with Hampson Gary as chairman, Thad Brown and Judge Sykes as members.

September 1:

Key to Radio Listings

Radio listings include AM (amplitude modulation) and FM (frequency modulation) radio stations in the United States, its territories and Canada. All collected data for these listings include information current to January 1992. The following is a breakdown of a sample radio listing. The sample, WOF, is a co-owned AM/FM station. To use the radio key, see boldface numbers and corresponding explanations.

(1) WOF(AM)—(2) Oct 8, 1946: (3) 21000 khz; 1 kw-D, 250 w-N, DA-D. (L-KQSL) TL: N35 48 31 W121 43 28. (CP: 5 kw-U). (3a) Stereo. (4) Box 1000 (99999). (909) 555-1000. TWX: 909-999-9999. (5) General Broadcasting Corp. (group owner; acq 7-20-69; $255,000 with co-located FM; (5a) FTR 2-12-83). (6) Net: ABC/E, AP, Mountain State Network. Rep: Jones & Company, Penn State. Format: MOR, C&W. Spec prog: Sp 3 hrs wkly. (7) John Jones, gen mgr; David Smith, chief engr. (8) Rates: $14; 13.50; 14; 12.50.

(1a) WOF-FM—(2) October 1959: (9) 101.1 mhz; 3 kw. Ant 300 ft. (3a) Stereo. (10) Dups AM 50%. Format: C&W. (11) WOF-TV affil. (8) Rates: $8.50; 7; 8.50; _.

(1) Station call letters as assigned by the Federal Communications Commission (FCC).

(1a) Station call letters for co-owned FM station. WOF-FM has the same ownership as WOF(AM), and the FM listing contains only information different from the AM. Co-owned AM and FM stations are always listed together, even when they have dissimilar call letters. In some instances FM may be listed first.

(2) Date station first went on air (regardless of subsequent ownership changes).

(3) Frequency in kilohertz; power and hours of operation. WOF operates with one kilowatt in daytime hours, 250 watts at night, and uses a directional antenna in daytime. Nighttime operation is limited to hours when dominant station KQSL is operating in daylight. TL refers to the geographical coordinates (longitude and latitude) of the transmitter. WOF holds a construction permit for five kilowatts power day and night.

(3a) WOF broadcasts in stereo.

(4) Address and zip code, telephone, Teletype Writer Exchange number. Fax number may also be included.

(5) Licensee name and date of acquisition (if not original owner). If the licensee is a group owner—a company with several broadcast properties—it is so identified, as a group owner of which the licensee is a subsidiary. Details on group owners are listed in section J. If the station has been sold and the sale information is available, it is recorded after the acquisition date, ie. acq. date; purchase price; FTR date.

(5a) FTR date. FTR refers to Broadcasting Magazine's weekly "For the Record" column, where station sales are recorded as received from the FCC.

(6) Network, audio news service, representative and programming. WOF national affiliates are ABC Entertainment Network and AP Network. The regional affiliate is Mountain State. The WOF national sales representative is Jones & Company and their regional sales representative is Penn State. The WOF program format is part middle-of-the-road, part country and western, with three hours weekly of special programming in Spanish. For radio format definitions, see A-474.

(7) Personnel.

(8) Advertising rates. This data indicates the prices the station charges for a one-minute spot, run 12-times-a-week during the following time slots: 6 a.m.-10 a.m.; 10 am.-3 p.m.; 3 p.m.-7 p.m.; 7 p.m.-midnight, respectively. If a time slot is not applicable, a dash (_) replaces the rate.

(9) Frequency for WOF-FM is 101.1 megahertz, with 3 kilowatts of effective radiated power and an antenna height of 300 feet above average terrain. WOF-FM broadcasts in stereo (see(3a)).

(10) Programming. WOF-FM duplicates WOF(AM) programs 50% of the time and has a country and western format.

(11) Co-owned TV. WOF-TV has the same licensee as WOF-AM-FM.

Note: Listings for independent AM & FM stations follow the sample shown for WOF(AM).

An asterisk (*) indicates noncommercial stations.
