IN MEMORIAM

It is a little more than a month ago that the death occurred in Bombay of Shri P. M. Lad, I.C.S., Secretary, Ministry of Information and Broadcasting. This has been a severe blow to the All India Radio for Shri Lad was more than a senior officer and a seasoned administrator. Being a poet and scholar of repute and a man of culture with amazingly versatile interests, he gave to the All India Radio, leadership and guidance in practically all its activities. He was gifted with a lively imagination and a fertile and original mind. These gifts he applied with rare enthusiasm to all manner of problems, from programme planning to staff re-organisation, from concerts and orchestrations to folklore and rural listening. Several new developments in A.I.R. programmes in recent years arose from his remarkable capacity to interpret Government's policy into effective and imaginative executive action. For a long time to come, the stamp of his personality will remain in many undertakings of A.I.R. His was a sparkling personality, brilliant yet modest. This modesty sprang from his deep and spontaneous feeling for the common man. It is given to few men in high position to be so constantly and genuinely aware of the sufferings and wants and desires of the man in the street.

Shri Lad entered the Indian Civil Service in 1928 and was only 52 at the time of his death. He served in various capacities under the Government of Bombay and officiated for some time as its Chief Secretary. He came as Secretary to the Ministry of Information and Broadcasting in March 1954.

He was associated with numerous cultural organisations and undertakings and played an important part in the programme of the Sahitya Akadami, the Children's Film Society and other cultural organisations. His publications include a book of essays in Marathi (Krittika), a collection of poems (Madhupark), a learned treatise on Tukaram's poetry and other works. Shortly before his death he was engaged in the preparation of a critical edition of Ritusamhara and was also studying the Saptashati tradition. An erudite scholar of Pali, he was able to plan the Buddha Mahaparinirvana celebration programmes with deep understanding. Few people know that the film "Gotama the Buddha" was in many details planned by him personally.

All India Radio offers its homage to the memory of an outstanding public servant and a brilliant product of this generation and its deep sympathies to the bereaved family.

THE WEEK'S LISTENING

NORTH REGIONAL SERVICE

DELHI

It is a noteworthy feature of our country's inherent vitality that even during the days of her bondage she was able to produce men of distinction and eminence in various spheres. They made lasting contribution towards the enrichment of civilization and imperceptibly prepared the way for the emergence of India as a great and free nation.

During the week special programmes will be arranged on the birth anniversaries of Motilal Nehru, Tagore and Gokhale.

On May 6 falls the birth anniversary of Motilal Nehru, a born leader of men. A great jurist, he was a man of dauntless courage and lofty bearing and a sensitive patriot whose self-respect could brook no affront. Two features—one in English and the other in Hindi—on the life and work of Motilal Nehru will be broadcast on this day. The feature in English by K. Iswara Dutt, can be heard at 2030 hours while the feature in Hindi by Vishwambhar Nath Pandey, will be broadcast at 2130 hours.

Another anniversary programme to be broadcast during the week, on May 9, will be in memory of Gopal Krishna Gokhale—a great lover of his country and of humanity. He used to say, "Public life must be spiritualised". Animated by this spirit Gokhale founded "the Servants of India Society" in 1905. Mahatma Gandhi met him in 1896. He wrote "Since our meeting, Gokhale's political career served me as an ideal. I installed him in my heart of hearts as my teacher in Politics". Two special programmes, one in English and the other in Hindi, will be broadcast on this day. The programme in English can be heard at 2030 hours and the programme in Hindi at 2130 hours.

EKALAVYA

This is a dramatised version of the famous Mahabharata story of Ekalavya. Drona has promised Arjuna that he would train him up to be the ace-archer in the world, unrivalled in skill. Ekalavya, another disciple of Drona, also simultaneously attains such perfection in the same art that Drona fears that he may surpass Arjuna in the field. Drona demands from Ekalavya his thumb as his fee. Ekalavya, who bears unlimited reverence for his guru, willingly cuts off his thumb and makes a gift of it.

A verse feature based on this episode will be broadcast from AIR Jaipur on May 10, at 2115 hours. The author is Lalit Goswami.

Tune into AIR Nagpur at 2130 hours on May 7, when you can listen to Nile Nile Dole, a play in Marathi about a girl whose big blue eyes brought her untold suffering. The script is by Vasant Varhadpande.

THE SOUL OF MUSIC

A raga may be sung accurately without creating any emotional impact on the listener. Such a piece of music is without rasa. In the achievement of a higher aesthetic value a synthesis of shant and satya is necessary. The art of any musician has to be the creation of rasa. Without rasa a piece of music may conform to all its laws without achieving its soul. The various factors that are necessary to be had in mind for attaining this objective will be discussed by V. R. Talashikar in his Marathi talk Rasa ani Sangeet to be broadcast on May 11 at 2015 hours.

THE visitor to Tokyo, if he walks eastward through the neon-lighted jungle of the Ginza, comes suddenly upon the large and unbeautiful facade of the Kabuki-za. This, the Kabuki theatre, is Tokyo's Covent Garden, or La Scala or Bolshoi Theatre or what you will. The official guide book notes with pride that it was reconstructed in 1950 at a cost of 281 million yen; "a splendid example", it says, "of modern Japanese architecture." The visitor, whom we may suppose to be innocent of Japanese history and dramatic conventions, buys a ticket and steps into an auditorium capable of holding 2,600 people, but he has no time to notice that, because in crossing the foyer he has stepped backwards through two or three centuries. Outside, on the streets, are the milling crowds of office workers, shop girls and students, all in European clothes, with only a sprinkling of shopping housewives from the provinces in Kimonos. In the theatre not only the costumes, but the language, the music and the dancing, the very gestures in the mime, have remained virtually unchanged since the Kabuki form reached the peak of its technical achievement towards the end of the 18th century. And the themes of the plays in the Kabuki theatre today are the same legends, part heroic part fantastic, which engaged (Chikamatsu, who died in 1724) and have the same scale of values, the same insistence on the gradations of feudal obligations and loyalty.

Yet the Kabuki is not the classical dramatic form in Japan. Thanks largely to Arthur Waley, every schoolboy knows that the purest form of Japanese drama, the crystallisation, as it were, of the aristocratic spirit, is to be found in the Noh plays, a form which was introduced in the 14th century, reached its full maturity in the 15th, and has been preserved unchanged to the present day. The Kabuki is a debased or "popular" form of the Noh tradition. The word "Noh" means accomplishment. "Kabuki" on the other hand means to lose one's balance or to be playful. The resemblances between the Noh and the Attic theatres are obvious. Both derived from ritual dancing and used a poetic text, music and dancing in combination. The use of a chorus to explain the progress of the action, and of masks as symbols or abstractions of the emotions associated with particular characters, were common to both. And were concerned with themes of moral and political significance derived from the familiar national myths. But whereas the whole of Athens took a holiday for a dramatic festival, the Noh was kept strictly a preserve of the nobility, the daimyo; (400 years later it was still an esoteric art, and Bernard Shaw, when he visited Tokyo, is said to have committed the terrible solecism of falling asleep during a Noh performance). The Kabuki drama, however, with its greater emphasis on visual splendour, both in costume and decor, and on movement, is far from soporific. It began as a common people's reaction against the Noh drama, then adapted the Noh forms to the popular taste of the seventeenth century, and ended by developing as rigid a formalism as Noh itself.

ADULATION OF WOMEN

A well-established tradition has it that Kabuki was founded by a beautiful dancing girl, O Kuni, who sometime in the last years of the 16th century, or perhaps early in the 17th, left a Shinto Shrine with her lover Nagoya Sanzaburo, and came to the capital city of Kyoto singing religious songs and dancing sacred dances. The pair then set up a stage in a dry river bed in Kyoto, where O Kuni performed farces written for her by Sanzaburo, and these farces were based on the Kyogen or comic interludes which were played between the acts of a Noh performance. The citizens of Kyoto flocked to see O Kuni, and soon there were rival performers in Kyoto, Edo and Osaka. For the first thirty years or so of the existence of the Kabuki, it was performed exclusively by women, and there are said to have been many brilliant actresses entertaining the people of the major cities of the time. But this public adulation of women, so much at variance with the traditional Japanese conception of the relative positions of men and women in Society, did not last long. There were complaints about the laxity of the actresses' morals, and in 1629 the appearance of women on the stage was forbidden by law, a law which continued to be in force till the middle of the 19th century. So that to this day there are no actresses in the Kabuki theatre, and some actors, called Onnagata specialise in women's roles. and it is said that they are so skilled at this art that Geishas go to the Kabuki theatre to learn deportment from them.

That is not to say that the Kabuki is a realistic theatre. In the days of O Kuni there was some flirtation with Realism. One, of whom the chronicler states that she loved flowers and the moon and that a snowy evening or a maple scene inspired her to poetry, did not it seems, lay much store by dramatic conventions. The scope of the plays was enlarged to include incidents in the lives of common people as well as the legendary heroes and slayers of demons. There was more music than in the Noh plays, and the movements of the players were less rigidly formalised. Even in Chikamatsu's day there was debate as to how far acting should resemble reality. Some one had said to the dramatist that in a play a retainer should look like a real retainer and a nobleman like a plausible one, but it is a theory which does not take into account the real methods of art. Art is something which lies in the slender margin between the real and the unreal. Of course it seems desirable, in view of the current taste for realism, to have the retainer in the play copy the gestures and speech of a real retainer; but in that case should a real retainer of a daimyo put rouge and powder on his face like an actor? Or would it prove entertaining if an actor, on the grounds that real retainers do not make up their faces, were to appear on the stage and perform, with his beard growing wild and head shaven? That is what I mean by the slender margin between the real and the unreal. Entertainment lies between the two.

SENSATIONAL EFFECTS

Symbolism and formalism won the day, but only after a curious compromise. Whereas the manner of acting in the Kabuki theatre was stylised and conventionalised, elaborately naturalistic scenery was introduced. In the Noh theatre the background consists at most of a few symbolic objects like a painted pine-tree, and the atmosphere is austere. The Kabuki stage shows the search for novel, even sensational effects. There is usually an elaborately painted back-drop; real furniture and other properties are used; and there is the velvet horse which can kick and rear and plunge. I believe an actor can make a good living if he specialises in being a horse's fore or hind legs. The scenes and properties, however, are changed in the full view of the audience by attendants dressed in black (showing that they are not in the play) and actors also change costumes (and personalities) assisted by dressers in black while on the stage. It was in the Kabuki theatre that the revolving stage, permitting quick changes of scene, was first invented or perhaps it was borrowed from the Puppet Theatre, a precursor of the Kabuki, and to which the Kabuki owes some of the marionette-like gestures in miming. The elevator—set—a prepared set rising through the floor—so favoured by musical revues in the west, was also invented in the Kabuki theatre. On the other hand, the basic structure of the Noh theatre has been preserved. The stage is a rectangular projection with the auditorium on three sides of it, bringing the audience and the actors closely and harmoniously together. "Acting in the round", developed in Europe in the nineteen twenties, had nothing to add to this technique. The stage is connected with the actors' dressing rooms by a raised passage, the hashigakari or "flower-passage" in the Noh theatre; in the Kabuki theatre two additional bridges are built for effective entrances. The audience sits on the matted floor in boxes arranged around the stage.

KABUKI PLAYS

I have talked at some length of the externals of Japanese drama, for it is as a spectacle that the foreigner sees it. To the outsider Kabuki is a mixture of pageant and farce, and if there is something more, as there must be, a foreigner, especially a casual visitor, cannot hope to penetrate to the heart of it. The recitative, even with a translation to hand, entirely lacks dramatic tension of any kind. The poetry of the Noh plays is subtle, allusive symbolic and to some extent these qualities appear to have been carried over into the Kabuki form. The books tell us that there are three varieties

TARABALAM

'Marriages are made in Heaven' so goes the saying. But in practice at least in a few instances the parental influence is so great that the bridal pair discard all their solemn vows and try to weild their destinies in their own way. This truism is amply illustrated in Tarabalam a play in Telugu scheduled for broadcast from Vijayawada on May 10 at 2115 hours. The script is by V. S. Rama Rao.

HYDERABAD

FOREWORDS—THEN AND NOW

The religious sentiment and high moral purpose in which all the Indian literatures are interested enjoin on the author humility and self-effacement. Therein is the source of the tradition of anonymity. With the widening of the cultural horizons and the impact of Western thought, 'personality' begins to assume importance. The writers at the turn of the century recognised this. Their anxiety to reconcile the tradition of humility with the claims of personality finds amusing expression in the author's familiar foreword in which the reader is entreated to accept the merits and excuse the lapses of the book.

The gradual emergence of the author's personality is best seen by comparing the author's preface today with the 'introductions' of fifty year ago.

A talk on the author's introduction, then and now, in Rasamay, a literary programme in Telugu can be heard from AIR Hyderabad at 2130 hours on Sunday.

DO DEVTA EK MANDIR

He had died—her husband, leaving a tiny tot of a son. Then the other man started visiting her, an old associate and one time lover. She didn't mind it, for how lovely she was! His visits became too frequent to be without purpose. But she knew her mind, she never objected. Until one day the child, her dead husband's son, started looking upon the visitor as his own father. This the devoted wife in her could not allow. And she shut her door to the old friend. And she was once again forlorn. This is how Jeelani Bano's play Do Devta Ek Mandir proceeds. The play can be heard from Hyderabad on May 7 at 2130 hours.

TALK ON GOKHALE

A talk in Hindi on the life and activities of Gokhale, the great Servant of India, whom even the Mahatma claimed as his political Guru can be heard on May 9 at 2130 hours

THE KABUKI THEATRE OF JAPAN

of Kabuki plays. In the first, the domestic play or sewa-mono the dramatist will deal with the life of common men, "some natural sorrow, loss or pain". The Jidai-mono or historical play concerns the heroes of legend and history, magnificent victory, magnificent death. It is to this category that the presentation of the most famous of all Kabuki plays belongs, "The Tale of the Forty Seven Ronin", the Tale which comes closest to being a national classic, known to every child in Japan. A debased form of the Jidai-mono is the Aragoto or street-play, a kind of Grand Guignol with super-human heroes, weeping ghosts and the like, giving much scope for grotesque make up, rhetoric and fantastic action. The third variety, the Shosagoto is the most characteristic form of Kabuki drama, being mostly adaptations of Noh plays and comic interludes. Plot and dialogue are simple, and the play relies mainly on the elaborate dances and the symbolism of the movements.

But, if I may hazard a personal opinion (which, since I do not know the language, is even more unreliable than critical opinions in the arts usually are), the Kabuki drama is more important for its technical innovations in the past than for any profundity of dramatic content, or any present vitality or hope of future development. For it is not in the mainstream of the tradition of Japanese classicism, a tradition that embraces the allusive obliqueness of the short. Lyric or haiku, the charm and elegance of the court-novels like "The Tale of the Genji" and the wood-cuts and colour prints of the Ukiwoe School and the unbending austerity of the Noh drama. On the other hand, the Kabuki drama is also not spontaneous like an Indian "Jatra". Lying half way between symbolism and realism, between classical restraint and romantic abandon, the Kabuki seems to me to be something less than one of the great theatres of the World.
